There isn't so much action in this western as in some previous Gibson releases. Still when it hits its stride it finishes with plenty of ridin' and shootin'. The hero numbers among his friends, the sheriff and the latter's pretty daughter. Among the enemies are a pair of real estate sharks. One of the partners kills the other with the hero's gun, and the youth's father having engaged in an argument with the deceased prior to the killing, naturally the old man is arrested for the crime. There is one bit of action which is never cleared up. The station is robbed and a posse start in pursuit, but nothing ever develops from it. The incident is forgotten. However, it paves the way for the Quaker to become an "up and at 'em" cowboy.

Using the girl as a shield, he kidnaps her and the natives start in hot pursuit. When he leaves her momentarily a couple of them take her to the real assassin. Which brings us right down to the climax which features a healthy fight between the Quaker and the villain. The latter, thinking he has killed his rival, proceeds to boast of his other victim. But the hero is only feigning and soon gets a scissors-hold upon the murderer. Naturally he wins. The titles are colored with Quaker expressions which help out the characterization. It's a neat little western which somehow registers as sure-fire. Gibson is easy in his role and Edna Murphy is charming as the girl. Wade Boteler, however, gets too often in the center of the picture.

The Cast

Cyril Hennerson.....Ed ( Hoot) Gibson
Grace Nolan.....Edna Murphy
Art Jordan.....Wade Boteler
George Berge.....Jack Walter
Andrew McBride.....O. Hoffman
Sheriff Nolan.....William Taylor
Alfred Clark.....Bert Wilson
Mrs. Henderson.....Gertrude Clair
John Henderson.....Wm. Welsh

Story and Scenario by Roy Myers. Directed by Nat Ross. Photographed by Virgil Miller. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Quaker youth, living in West, dresses like a cowboy and attempts to act like one, but his pacifist tendencies hold him in restraint. When his father is arrested on trumped-up charge of murder the boy forgets his peaceful inclinations and whoops it up like a real Westerner. He captures the real crook and wins the girl.

Classification—Western carrying character study and the customary elements.

Production Highlights—The appeal of the leading character. The transformation of the Quaker. The fight in the climax. The sentiment.

Exploitation Angles—Title suggests a teaser campaign. Plot suggests a spread on the action, theme and characterization. Also suggests a prologue with girls attired as Quakers, etc. Gibson is getting good pictures. Would advise playing this up as one of his winners.

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms"

(Preferred-Lichtman—6971 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN effective heart interest story is offered in "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," an adaptation of a Bertha M. Clay novel. Since this author made a specialty of playing upon the tear ducts you may consider that Director Gasnier has emphasized the sentiment and pathos. It isn't a picture of action or incident. Rather is it a simple story of misdirected passion and unrequited love with the central figure a vengeful prima donna from Spain who, when she finds that her affection is a thing of the moment with the American youth, determines to win him at all costs.

He is engaged to an American girl and to avoid complications secretly marries her. But the fair senorita does not have the hot blood of Spanish grandees running through her veins for nothing. In the attempt to gain possession of the revolver she is accidentally wounded. Her vengeance is complete when the youth is sent up for five years. The subsequent scenes show the pangs of separation between husband and wife. And Gasnier has not forgotten the pathos. Several prison shots are offered, interspersed with the flashes of the wife's lonely existence. The convict's freedom is gained by a pardon when the senorita discovers the plight of the wife.

The picture carries too much stress upon sentiment and pathos and should be shortened, thus speeding up the action. If the hero had told of his marriage everything would have been O. K. with him but there wouldn't have been any plot. Estelle Taylor is admirably cast as the senorita and gives a spirited performance. The production is good and offers real atmosphere. We would call it a first rate audience picture.

The Cast

Rosita Mendez, Spain's favorite prima donna.....Estelle Taylor
Alan Randolph.....Kenneth Harlan
Barnes Ramsey, his lawyer and closest friend.....Arthur Hall
Violet Beaton, Randolph's fiancee.....Edith Roberts
Colonel Beaton, her father.....Carl Stockdale
Pio Guerra, Rosita's manager.....John Cossar
Fallie, Rosita's maid.....Evelyn Selbie

By Bertha M. Clay. Scenario by Hope Loring. Edited by Eve Ansell. Directed by Gasnier. Released by Al. Lichtman.

The Story: Spanish opera singer loves American youth. He is engaged to American girl in his home city. The prima donna, piqued at his hasty departure, follows him to America. To avoid her he secretly marries his fiancee. However, he calls upon the senorita, who attempts to shoot him. She accidentally wounds herself and blames the American, who is sent to prison. In the end she understands the situation and brings about his pardon.

Classification: Heart interest story of romance and passion, pathos and sentiment.

Production Highlights: The work of Estelle Taylor, who is admirably cast for Spanish senorita. The good production. The human interest moments. The atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles: Suggests a colorful prologue featuring a tabloid sketch of "Carmen," etc. Would advise playing up the human interest note and putting forth teaser questions asking your patrons if they would govern themselves like the characters if placed in similar positions.

"The Woman Who Fooled Herself"

Associated Exhibitors-Pathe—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is a familiar tale of romance coupled with frenzied finance with the love interest coming out on top. There is nothing original in the idea or the development of it. It progresses evenly enough, building straight to its denouement and finishing according to Hoyle, although there is a flourish at the end which takes on the form of an anti-climax. The theme is the orthodox pattern detailing a frame-up in which a chorus girl is employed by a group of schemers to fleece an innocent "come on" of his property. It develops that she will fall in love with him. This is natural. But she refuses to admit it. In fact she spurns him through being conscious-stricken over her previous conduct. So she makes amends and restores the option to her sweetheart.

It is possible that the directors might have employed some new twists here and there, but they have played safe. One doesn't have to be a keen analyst to discover the development of the plot. After the hero is introduced one is certain of the finish. The story gets off to rather a poor start, but picks up speed eventually and should prove a satisfying offering to those who do not expect a screen masterpiece every other day. Especial attention has been paid to the settings and it is the production end of the picture which will earn the admiration of the spectator.

Considerable local color and atmosphere suffice in giving the feature a pleasing background—particularly in the cabaret scenes of the South American town. The staging is highly creditable. The plot is too familiar—too obvious and slight to offer much appeal. May Allison, the star, returns to the screen after a long absence and gives a charming performance as the chorus girl. She is thoroughly animated in her expression—which means that she is always in character. The supporting cast is capable with honors going to Robert Ellis, who also assisted with the direction. A little editing here and there would improve the continuity which becomes slightly hazy at times. We would call it an average picture.

The Cast

Eva Lee.....May Allison
Fernando Pennington.....Robert Ellis
Don Fernando Casablanca.....Frank Currier
Dona Marie Pennington.....Bessie Wharton
Cameron Camden.....Robert Schable
Eban Burnham.....Louis Dean
The Padre.....Rafael Arcos

By Charles A. Logue. Directed by Charles A. Logue and Robert Ellis. Photographed by A. Fried and Eugene O'Donnell.

The Story—New York chorus girl accepts a position as cabaret dancer in a South American cafe. She is the choice of a group of frenzied financiers to mulct a young Latin out of his money. She falls in love with the youthful Don and regrets her bargain. After some complications she is able to square herself.

Classification—Romance and high finance coupled together in conventional story with love the conquering element.

Production Highlights—Good production. Star's performance and capable work by cast. The Spanish atmosphere and local color.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise featuring star who has been absent from screen for some time. Suggests featuring it as adventure romance. Title suggests a teaser campaign. Would feature it in program advising patrons to see story of chorus girl who falls in love with Spaniard.

Drawing Power—Best suited for neighborhood houses.

Mr. Louis Lewyn, Editor,
"Screen Snapshots,"
Los Angeles, Cal.
Dear Mr. Lewyn:
I have booked the entire series of "Screen Snapshots" from Pathe for the California Theater, and am convinced that it is the cleverest novelty reel on the market today.
The type of material that you are succeeding in getting for this single reel subject is splendid, and every "Snapshots" that I have run so far has been thoroughly enjoyed by the patrons of the California Theater. The last one I used which had, among other interesting subjects, a little sketch participated in by Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin was a knockout.
"Screen Snapshots" is not only entertaining but I believe it be the means of increasing the public's interest in pictures, and I believe that they will always be welcomed on the screens of the best theatres.
With best wishes for your success, I am
Cordially yours,
Managing Director.

Behind the scenes with stars of the screen

THERE isn't a man, woman or child in any of your audiences who wouldn't give a good deal to get "behind the scenes" of filmdom.

Screen Snapshots does just that; it shows the stars as they are, on the lot, off the lot, at work, at home and at play.

Every number is a box-office attraction for it has the box-office stars.

"As usual Screen Snapshots contains pictures of stars that will be of particular interest."—M. P. World.

"Views of stars on vacation instead of location make this a very pleasing reel. Most audiences like to see their favorite players 'back stage' and this should be popular."—Film Daily.

"Tess of the Storm Country"

United Artists—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT will probably be remembered than Mary Pickford's original "Tess of the Storm Country," established her as a star and brought into favor the five reel picture as a medium of entertainment. That was some eight of ten years ago. Now she has made a new "Tess," which, while similar in outline to the first screening, has been embellished by better photography, better treatment of the plot, better acting and a better background.

Taking the story for what it is worth, one cannot accept it as other than a heavy slice of sentimental molodrama which is always obvious and unreal. However, Director John Robertson has lifted it into worth while entertainment through his admirable, sympathetic treatment. Somehow he makes the story seem plausible despite its artificial plot, and Mary Pickford attends to the rest.

Most of us are familiar with the story which tells of the conflict between a pious rich man who has bought up the land, surrounding his house on the hill, occupied by squatters. Since these humble people have always lived at the water's edge, not caring to leave their tumble-down shacks, it is a perplexing problem to get rid of them.

The outstanding situation is when the fair squatter comes to the church determined to have the babe sprinkled before he dies. It is unreal but entirely effective in a melodramatic way. Since the dominie does not baptise the infant, Tess does it in a scene which is poignant with pathos. The picture has been given a fine production, is competently acted by David Torrence, Jean Herscholt and Forrest Robinson and with a little less stress laid upon the scenes between the vicious squatter and Tess, the picture would carry out its romantic tendencies to a much greater degree. Mary Pickford succeeds in being entirely human and lovable. Her pantomime is always expressive. You'll like this new "Tess," and so will your audience.

The Cast

Tessibel Skinner.....Mary Pickford
Frederick Graves.....Lloyn Hughes
Teola Graves.....Gloria Hope
Elias Graves.....David Torrence
Daddy Skinner.....Forrest Robinson
Ben Letts.....Jean Hersholt
Ezra Longman.....Danny Hoy
Dan Jordan.....Robert Russell
Old Man Longman.....Gus Saville
Mrs. Longman.....Mme. de Bodamere

By Grace Miller White, Directed by John Robertson. Photographed by Charles Rosher. Produced by Mary Pickford Pictures Corp. Released by United Artists.

The Story—Tess, the daughter of a squatter, fights the plan of a rich man on the hill to rid the land of her people. Her father is unjustly imprisoned for murder, and the girl has a severe trial attempting to outwit the vicious designs of a squatter. The rich man's son sympathizes with her and wins her love. In the end the rich man sees the light when he learns the true lesson of humility.

Classification—Melodrama based upon conflict between society and the squatters. Carries sentiment, pathos, humor and melodrama. New version of Mary Pickford's first success.

Production Highlights—The intelligent direction. The atmospheric backgrounds. The scenes in which the star expresses her individual comedy. The scene when she baptizes the child. The good acting by every member of the cast. The romantic moments. The human incident as found in the shack.

Exploitation Angles—This should be exploited as a new version of Mary Pickford's first success. We would advise playing up a teaser campaign along this line, dwelling upon popularity of book and star in what she calls her greatest role. The picture suggests an atmospheric prologue.

Drawing Power—Should draw in all kinds of houses. Star's popularity and popularity of book will see to that.

"The Lavender Bath Lady"

Universal—4,500 Feet

(Reviewed on Laurence Reid)

HERE is a picture or rather a role just made to order for Gladys Walton. The Universal star is peculiarly adept in masquerading as a society girl. She lives in a fanciful world here—a girl employed as a window demonstrator, displaying gowns for a fashionable shop. Some may wonder where the title fits in this picture since it hasn't much to do with the story. The little heroine refers to lavender bath salts occasionally—and this may be the connecting link. The early reels of this picture furnish a bit of novelty and get off to such a good start, that it is disappointing to see the plot lose its sparkle once the demonstrator introduces the romance.

The introductory scenes offer a young lady at a dressing table, giving orders to her maids. The succeeding shot features a crowd in the street blocking traffic so eager are the loiterers to catch a glimpse of the girl in the window. There is some effective comedy here. What follows seems arbitrary—as if it is introduced to furnish some mystery and suspense. The fair demonstrator becomes acquainted with a rich girl and goes to live with her as a companion. This is opportunity for the heroine to masquerade as the mistress during the absence of the other. So she falls in love with a young man, supposed to be blind. She believes him a crook after the wealthy girl's jewels. So in her attempt to keep them from being stolen she is accused of being a thief herself. But the youth turns out to be a detective. It is easy to see that he isn't a crook—which naturally eliminates the value of suspense.

The picture may be called fair entertainment. Miss Walton is deserving of better stories—stories which carry the highlights of "Second Hand Rose." It is rather slight although the director has brought forth some realistic atmosphere with the department store. The comedy moments offer pleasing incident. The star gives her usual spirited performance and her support is competent enough. There is the germ of a good idea here which could have been developed into something of real consequence. Adding the melodrama hasn't helped it any.

The Cast

Mayme Conroy.....Gladys Walton
Jeanette Gregory.....Charlotte Pierce
David Bruce.....Edward Burns
Simon Gregory.....Tom Ricketts
Maggie.....Lydia Yeamans Titus
Susanne.....Mary Winston
Dorgan.....Al. McQuarrie

By Shannon Fife. Directed by King Baggot. Adapted by George R. Chester. Photographed by Victor Milner. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Girl is window demonstrator in department store. She attracts attention and blocks traffic with her skill in displaying gowns. Wins the friendship of wealthy girl who invites her to her house as a companion. The heroine meets a young man there whom she believes a crook, but he turns out to be a detective. The girl saves the jewels from being stolen.

Classification — Romantic comedy-drama of girl whose ambition is to get into society. Adventurous line of action in early reels.

Production Highlights—Realistic atmosphere in department store. The early scenes of the window demonstrator. The star adept at playing role assigned her here. The good support. Interest fairly well sustained.

Exploitation Angles—This picture suggests a tie-up with stores featuring gowns—also drug stores which handle perfumes. Would advise having proprietors give window demonstrations as in the picture. The model can hold up cards featuring the articles for sale as well as the attractions of the picture.

Drawing Power—Likely to please all neighborhood houses. The star's followers will like it.

"Love in the Dark"

Metro—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE are several new wrinkles in this crook melodrama which is based upon the power of redemption when love asserts its influence. The author, who is investigating the Hall-Mills murder case for a local paper, knows something about criminology and he hasn't been afraid to use his knowledge. He has developed a good melodrama and has kept a watchful eye upon straightening out his complications.

What we like particularly about John Moroso's story is the subordination of the romantic element until the moment is ripe for its introduction. The new twist enters in having his hero a victim of blindness during the day, but whose sight returns after nightfall. This youth wants to go straight but his mercenary wife heckles him into doing "one more job." When they take an orphan girl into their home to take care of their little boy his redemption is in sight, but long before it is accomplished the spectator is in for considerable suspense over the mystifying incident. The director has kept the action progressive throughout. The hero is double-crossed but makes his escape, leaving word with the girl to advertise for him when she gets caught in a jam. Meanwhile she enters a rector's home as companion to his wife. And this influence is sufficient to eliminate her tough mannerisms acquired in the orphanage.

There isn't much coincidence present. The double-crosser re-enters her life. But he serves his purpose in making the girl an amateur detective. She discovers the dominie's weak son stealing from his safe, the money going into the clutches of an oily crook who manages to escape the law. How to restore the money is her problem. So she advertises for the young father who can only see at night. And he returns and does a "Jimmy Valentine" with the two safes.

The concluding scenes show a police raid on the gambling den and the youth expressing his joy over being reunited to his child and finding that orphan girl returns his affection. Oh yes his wife has been eliminated through death in an auto accident. Moroso has kept away from showing the hero having an operation to give him sight during the day. There are too many operations on the screen. And people have tired of such amazing miracles. A snappy picture, well told and acted in a spirited fashion by Viola Dana, who has adequate support from Cullen Landis, and a cute youngster, Bruce Guerin.

The Cast

Mary Duffy.....Viola Dana
Tim O'Brien.....Cullen Landis
Mrs. O'Brien.....Arline Pretty
"Red" O'Brien.....Bruce Guerin
Dr. Horton.....Margaret Mann
Robert Horton.....John Harron
Jimmy Watson.....Charles West

By John Moroso. Scenario by J. G. Hawks. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Photographed by John Arnold. Produced by Metro.

The Story—Orphan girl is taken in by family of crooks to take care of their little boy. The young father, sightless in the daytime, is able to see after nightfall. He is charmed by the girl and resolves to go straight. The young crook disappears to escape the law, but the orphan girl sends for him to restore the loot of a youth who has stolen from his father. The death of the crook's wife enables him to marry the pretty orphan.

Classification—Crook melodrama based upon redemption, carrying melodramatic incident, adventure, suspense and romance.

Production Highlights — New twists in old story. The very good direction. The atmosphere. The escape of the crook. The suspense. The capable work of cast and appealing personality of youngster, Bruce Guerin.

Exploitation Angles—Suggests a chance to put over a teaser campaign. Title is attractive for teaser spread. Suggests a tie-up with local papers putting in blind ad paging Tim O'Brien.

"The Marriage Chance"

American Releasing—Six Reels

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

HAMPTON DEL RUTH has, in his latest production, turned out a really diverting picture, a bit uneven, perhaps, but with genuine entertainment value. Although the story is not especially substantial, the cast employed gets the last possible bit of value from it.

Del Ruth's years of comedy directing have left their mark on him, and he still evinces a strong partiality to comedy "gags" and shapely limbs—not, however, that there is anything objectionable in this regard. As a result, however, the first few reels of the picture are played in a semi-farcical, semi-slapstick vein, which shifts suddenly to one of sombre melodrama, making it a bit difficult to get into the mood of it for a moment.

Incidentally, some of the melodramatic moments of the picture are really splendidly done. The scene in the operating room, where the insane surgeon has just been killed —the bride is accused—her rescuer defends her—the revolver in the hand of The Mute is found not to have been fired—and the door slowly swings out, moved by an unseen hand —touches a high point of melodrama seldom presented.

At the close, the melodramatic portion of the picture proves to be a dream, but the transition from reality to the dream is so cleverly handled that it is very unlikely that the average fan will "get wise" until the very end of the film.

Alto Allen is seen first as a young girl just expelled from boarding school, a role which she plays with vivacity and "pep." Milton Sills, opposite, has no great opportunity to use his ability, but is pleasing. Walthall is excellent as the vivisectionist. Tully Marshall and Laura La Varnie contribute some good comedy moments. Irene Rich is wholesome and charming as the older sister and Mitchell Lewis handles the role of The Mute well. Nick Cogley is seen in one of his colored servant characterizations.

The Cast

Eleanor Douglas.....Alia Allen
William Bradley.....Milton Sills
Dr. Paul Graydon.....Henry B. Walthall
Timothy Lamb.....Tully Marshall
Mary Douglas.....Irene Rich
The Mute.....Mitchell Lewis
Martha Douglas.....Laura La Varnie
Uncle Remus.....Nick Cogley

Written and directed by Hampton Del Ruth. Photographed by Del Clawson.

The Story—Young girl persuades sister to break engagement to doctor their guardian. Girl then becomes engaged to young district attorney. As their wedding is about to take place, the doctor gets her a glass of water. She loses consciousness and doctor pronounces her dead. She is buried. Cat drinks some of water and also becomes unconscious, but it recovers. They hasten to exhume girl, but find body missing. Doctor is about to use her as living subject for experiment, when he is shot. District attorney and others enter. Girl is accused, but sister appears and confesses. This then fades out and back to the wedding, when we discover it was all a dream which she had during a fainting spell. A triple wedding follows.

Production Highlights—The fine work of Henry B. Walthall. The sincere portrayal by Irene Rich. The comedy scenes between Tully Marshall and Laura La Varnie. The fainting of the bride at the wedding, after drinking the glass of water. The big melodramatic scene following the murder of the doctor. The recovery of the cat and the visit to the girl's grave. The excellent manner in which the dream scenes are handled, keeping the finish a mystery until the very end. The comedy work of Alta Allen as a boarding school girl in the early part of the picture.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the strong cast heavily, as you have several names to conjure with. If you have played Del Ruth's other big productions, feature him.

"Brawn of the North"

Trimble-Murfin-First National—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

STRONGHEART, the dog who created such a sensation in "The Silent Call," is with us again, this time known as Brawn in "Brawn of the North." It is a vigorous story of the North Country which Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin give the screen—a story showing a succession of thrills in the shape of hand-to-hand encounters—a story of primitive men who battle for existence in the far reaches of the North—a story of a wonderful dog whose devotion and friendship for those who treat him kindly and hatred for those who register cruelty toward him will carry him again into the spotlight of public favor. It's a fitting companion picture to "The Silent Call." This dog brings forth all the heroics, intelligence and sympathy for which he is famous. And to see him rescue the infant from the wolves will awaken response in a spectator who loves dumb animals.

While Strongheart or Brawn is the shining light of the feature, one must give Mr. Trimble and Miss Murfin the greatest credit for collecting as marvelous a background of snow scenes as the screen has ever shown. The scenery is superb, marked as it is by towering crags and vast spaces and the rugged atmosphere of the frozen North. For such a story of primitive men and primitive love it needed a primitive background.. It has received such. Primeval nature is in charge here—a perfect setting for a story of a lonely brute's metamorphosis. The dog comes north with his mistress and saves her time and again from false friends. Yet when he is rescued from a trap by the regenerated brute who has compelled the girl to marry him, he shows his true dog devotion.

Since the story is told in eight reels it stands to reason that it could be profitably shortened thus eliminating the burden of carrying too much plot and incident. However, its main strokes are vigorous and compelling. The mighty backgrounds fit perfectly with the tremendous striving for existence—especially when the wolves close in on the stricken family. Brawn develops a romance of his own with a timber wolf, but he returns to rescue the child. These scenes in particular are fraught with suspense. Mr. Trimble has overlooked nothing to bring forth this vital element. His picture is thoroughly saturated with the call of the open spaces. It packs a terrific wallop. Thrills it has in abundance and they assemble from the introductory scenes and mount with intensity until the exciting climax when Brawn saves the infant. A vigorous document and no mistake.

The Cast

Marion Wells.....Irene Rich
Peter Coe.....Lee Shumway
Howard Burton.....Joseph Barrel
Lester Wells.....Roger James Manning
The Missionary.....Philip Hubbarn
The Missionary's Wife.....Jean Metcalf
The Baby.....Baby Evangeline Bryant
The Vamp.....Lady Silver
Brawn.....Strongheart

By Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin. Directed by Laurence Trimble. Photographed by C. B. Dryer. Produced by Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin. Released by First National.

The Story—Treats of the exploits of a dog who accompanies his mistress to the North country. She has been sent for by her brother and fiance. The latter proves to be a scamp and the dog saves the girl from his evil designs. The girl is forced into marriage with a brute who eventually is transformed into a gentleman. The dog is caught in a trap and the husband saves him. It later develops that the animal saves their infant from death by the wolves. And the dog, incidentally, develops a romance of his own.

Classification—Adventures melodrama of North, featuring the love and devotion of a dog. Thrills, backgrounds, excitement and romance are interwoven in the plot.

"Anna Ascends"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ALICE BRADY has in "Anna Ascends," a screen version of the stage play which she appeared in two seasons ago There was nothing conspicuous about the original to make a fuss over, and the film adaptation will not be catalogued as a masterpiece. It simply tells a story of an immigrant girl who is ambitious enough to rise from her lowly environment. The author has made her a Syrian instead of an Italian or a Russian. Otherwise it is the same character study which is interwoven with considerable hokum melodrama and the customary romance. Alice Brady colors it because she is particularly skillful in portraying such roles.

It appears to us that it could have been made more plausible so that the human note might be better emphasized. It is, indeed, "picturey" to see this heroine rise so rapidly until she is accepted in the best society. The early reels are much more interesting since they reveal considerable local color and the action appears somewhat realistic. It is reasonable to believe that this dynamic young immigrant would experience a love affair with a native New Yorker and attempt, through his influence over her, to expose her employer as a crook. But once she brandishes a knife and uses it upon one of her employer's associates, things begin to happen too quickly. Thinking she has killed the smuggler of jewels, she runs away and a title or two and an unimportant scene informs us that she is on the high road to success.

Really the best part of the picture is the development of the romance and this isn't extremely vital. The lovers are separated and the melodrama is introduced. Meanwhile the heroine writes a book and it makes such an impression that the hero's father, a newspaper publisher, assigns him to interview the author and sign her up for a series of articles. So the romance comes into its own again. The crooks are exposed and all ends happily. The director's atmosphere is first rate and he has done good work with a story which is mostly colorless aside from its characterization. Really the figures are much more interesting than the plot—and the star is given fine support by David Powell and Edward Durand who are well cast. Robert Ellis makes the most of the weak role of the hero, while Charles Gerrard plays one of the villains with his customary finesse and poise. "Anna Ascends" carries a good production.

The Cast

Anna Ayyob.....Alice Brady
Howard Fisk.....Robert Ellis
The Baron.....David Powell
Countess Rostoff.....Nita Naldi
Count Rostoff.....Charles Gerrard
Siad Coury.....Edward Durand
Bessie Fisk.....Florence Dixon
Miss Fisk.....Grace Griswald
Mr. Fisk.....Frederick Burton

By Harry Chapman Ford. Scenario by Margaret Turnbull. Directed by Victor Fleming. Photographed by Gilbert Warrenton. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Syrian immigrant girl, employed in a coffee house, has ambitions to rise in the world. She gets mixed up with romance, diamond smugglers and the law and finally has a shadow cast upon her life in the thought that she has killed a man. She writes a book which creates a great sensation and romance comes back into her life. In the end she brings about the capture of the crooks and marries the man of her heart.

Classification—Melodrama carrying a character study with plenty of romance and adventure thrown in for good measure.

Production Highlights—The first rate detail and atmosphere. The humor of the early romantic scenes. The good character work of Charles Gerrard, Robert Ellis, David Powell, Edward Durand and Alice Brady.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise featuring it as adaptation of star's stage play. Also suggests tie-up with newspapers.

"Bulldog Drummond"

Hollandia-Producers Security-Hodkinson —Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT doesn't make much difference whether this picture carries out the spirit of the original or not, as the great majority of screengoers haven't seen the play from which it is adapted. But to one who looked in on this rollicking melodrama last season and saw something mighty close to burlesque—that spectator will be disappointed. Naturally the "business" which brought it so much amusement cannot be transferred to the screen. Noise cannot be reproduced, nor the dialogue of the characters who spoke in exaggerated tones. It was so absurd that the onlooker accepted it as unadulterated hokum—but hokum of a most humorous brand. It was as if Desperate Desmond himself had come to life.

The screen version is unduly serious and the manner of its treatment asks you to swallow the far-fetched incident hook, line and sinker. It presents five reels of adventurous escapades upon the part of a young retired British army officer who is bored with life. Revealed here on the screen he looms up as a first cousin of the intrepid hero of the most thrilling serial. And though the action is filled with a few thrills and a little suspense—these elements spend themselves through constant repetition. The hero is captured and makes his escape time and again. He advertises for an adventurous job and finds it immediately in the home of the heroine whose property is adjacent to a so-called sanatorium where a group of daring criminals stop at nothing less than murder to get the fortunes of their victims.

This hero is known as Bulldog Drummond owing to his tenacity at never giving up a job which he has tackled. But it becomes a trifle monotonous to see him repeating his stunts. First the action is in the sanatorium then it is transferred to the hero's chambers—with all the characters involved in the pursuit of one another. Such practises as blackmail, kidnapping, murder and assault are featured. There is enough action but not enough surprise—plenty of incident but not enough suspense. A little burlesque would have helped it considerably. The two factions pursue each other until Bulldog wins in the end. Carlyle Blackwell plays too nonchalantly as if he knew he wouldn't succumb. The picture furnishes good atmosphere and is satisfying as a whole, but it is not the slip-bang melodrama of the original, and the mystery is missing. It's a case of playing too safe.

The Cast

Captain Hugo Drummond.....Carlyle Blackwell
Phillis Benson.....Evelyn Greeley
Algy Longworth.....Gerald Deane
Peter Darrell.....Harry Bogarth
Carl Peterson.....Horace Devere
Dr. Henry Lakington.....Warwick Warde
James Handley, Phyllis's Uncle...William Browning
Irma Peterson.....Dorothy Fane

By "Sapper." Directed by Oscar Apfel. Produced by Hollandia Film Corp. Released by Hodkinson.

The Story—Young English Army officer, out of the service, bored with tedium of everyday existence, advertises for employment that will net him considerable adventure and excitement. The "ad" is answered by an attractive girl whose uncle is in the power of a mysterious band of murderers. The retired officer has an exciting time before he captures the criminals and wins the love of the girl.

Classification—Adventures melodrama revolving around powerful band of criminals who are in hourly combat with youth determined to capture them.

Production Highlights—Suspense in several of the situations. The sustained interest in the characterization. The scenes in which Drummond manages to elude the criminals.

Exploitation Angles—Since this was one of the Broadway hits as a stage play last season, would advise playing up the fact. Also would suggest using a blind teaser campaign. Blackwell is back on the screen. This will interest his followers.

"The Cowboy and the Lady"

Paramount—Five Reels

WHEN Clyde Fitch wrote this play many years ago he never dreamed that the screen would take up the visualization of the West with a vengeance. And the westerns have come so thick and fast the past few seasons that the playwright's offering "The Cowboy and the Lady," looks a little old-fashioned. Which is to say that it tells nothing which has not been told before. There is considerable conventional incident based upon a regulation plot. The production is the big feature here and really compensates for the story shortcomings. A collection of picturesque shots, revealing the vast plains of the West with the mountains in bold relief in the background, do much to lift up the weak and obvious story.

Indeed there is no real semblance of action until the picture is nearly over, the intervening reels being filled with unimportant incident. The characterization, however, may be said to present a bit of novelty. Tom Moore, playing the part of a dude cowboy, succeeds in adding a well sustained humorous note, especially when he spoils a perfectly good white flannel suit to reach the heroine's horse which has strayed from her, and again when he takes off his coat to fight a real cowboy. This incident relieves the picture of much of its orthodox coating. There is little suspense, but the spectator may hold his breath when the heroine is rescued from the trunk of a fallen tree which stretches across the rapids.

The idea is based upon clearing up a murder. Mary Miles Minter portrays a young ranch woman whose husband is a scamp. When he is murdered the distressed wife is accused of the crime. However, the dude cowboy who has rescued her before, comes to the rescue again and assumes the blame. This is old stuff. It strikes us that the self-sacrificing hero is being worked overtime these last few months. The climax is brought about in a fairly effective manner and the happy ending arrives. Yes, there is the other woman who straightened out the complications. Miss Minter makes an attractive heroine without being called upon to become emotional.

The Cast

Jessica Weston.....Mary Miles Minter
Teddy North.....Tom Moore
Molly X.....Viora Daniel
Midge.....Patricia Palmer
Weston.....Robert Schable
Ross.....Guy Oliver
Joe.....Leonard Clapham
Justice of the Peace.....Robert Mack

From the play by Clyde Fitch. Scenario by Julien Josephson. Directed by Charles Maigne. Photographed by Faxon Dean. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Treats of a young girl who is manager of a ranch—her marriage being unhappy. A young man, called the "dude cowboy," saves her life and protects her from an attack by her husband, who has been paying attention to another woman. The husband is found murdered and his wife is accused of the crime, but the other girl solves the mystery and the young lovers are happy.

Classification—Western melodrama based upon characteristic incident.

Production Highlights—Some highly attractive shots. Good work of Mary Miles Minter and Tom Moore. Some fairly good incidents.

Exploitation Angle—Would advise featuring the star and Tom Moore, who are your best bets for getting the crowd. The title suggests a teaser campaign. Also suggests a ballyhoo campaign with girl attired in western regalia riding up and down the streets on western pony.

Drawing Power—Best suited for neighborhood houses and second class downtown houses.

Fox—4,600 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is something about a circus story which is always sure-fire. The glamour of the saw-dust ring, the atmosphere of the life beneath the big top—these qualities have never been known to fail in intriguing the imagination. As a result most screengoers are going to enjoy "Shirley of the Circus." Without a doubt it is the best program feature which has been released by Fox in a long while and it will be accepted as Shirley Mason's most entertaining picture. It is well told and sustains the interest from inception to conclusion, releasing considerable suspense, plenty of thrills and is admirably balanced with the romantic element.

From the introductory shot which features a traveling circus troupe performing in the streets of a small French village, down through the incident pertaining to the adventure and romance which accompanies the performers in general and the chief trouper in particular, the spectator is certain to greet it as rattling good entertainment. The production is rich in atmosphere. The circus is complete in every detail and there is no arbitrary incident introduced to give it a punch. What takes place is dovetailed in the plot with the result that the climax seems logical.

We see an American artist aroused to pity over the girl, sending her to school. She escapes to avoid her guardian, the anchor man among the acrobats. But he follows her to America and discovers her living in the home of the artist's fiancee. A little pathos enters here when the girl returns to her old associates to avoid any unpleasant relations between her friends. And once back with the troupe the climax reveals the strong man seeking revenge upon his partner who has won the love of the girl. It's a big punch when the jealous admirer causes the youth to miss his grasp in a spectacular leap. And another punch accompanies the scene when the lions become unmanageable as a result of the accident and cause a panic.

It is zippy action and no mistake revealed to the tune of genuinely thrilling suspense. The star gives a charming performance although the acting honors go to Alan Hale for his masterly handling of the role of the jealous acrobat. George O'Hara, a newcomer, takes care of the hero's role in a praiseworthy manner. This picture is one of the best bets you can book this season.

The Cast

Nita.....Shirley Mason
Pierre.....George O'Hara
James Blackthorne.....Crauford Kent
Max.....Alan Hale
Blanquette.....Lulu Warrenton
Susan Van Der Pyl.....Maude Wayne
Mrs. Van Der Pyle.....Mathilde Brundage

By Robert M. Lee. Scenario by Robert M. Lee. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Photographed by G. O. Post. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Circus girl arouses admiration of an American artist while traveling through France, and he sends her to school. She is loath to leave the boy acrobat, though having no respect nor love for guardian, the strong man. She escapes from school to be rid of him and finds her way to the artist's home in America. When she discovers that his fiancee does not want her around, she returns to her old associates, where she finds ultimate happiness with her youthful sweetheart.

Production Highlights—The circus atmosphere. Well sustained interest. The scene when the chief acrobat causes his rival to miss his grasp in a spectacular leap. The scene when the lions overpower the trainer. The fast action and first rate suspense. The good work by the east.

Exploitation Angles—People are always interested in a circus story. So would advise featuring its highlights. Suggests plenty of bally-

Buffalo Briefs

Gala Revival Week is the way Manager Gene Pfeil is announcing his program for the week of November 19. Gene is planning to change his program at the Strand every day, showing a number of the old classics such as Mary Pickford in "Through the Back Door," Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mollycoddle," D. W. Griffith's "Dream Street," Alma Rubens in "Humoresque," "The Miracle Man," Rodolph Valentino in "The Sheik," and Cecil B. DeMille's "Something to Think About."

Jim Cardino, manager of the Kensington theatre, is going to build another theatre in this thriving section of the city. The new house will be at Georgetown and Bailey avenue and will be ready for the entertainment of patrons early next year.

Ralph W. Thayer, who is now managing the Strand in Niagara Falls, will also manage the Cataract which reopened Monday evening, November 13, with vaudeville and pictures. The house has been entirely remodeled.

Mrs. Sarah J. Ehrmann, Buffalo's representative in the Good Will delegation to France last summer, the French consul and his wife, were the guests of Manager T. Cecil Leonard at the Olympic theatre Sunday evening, November 12, on the occasion of the first local presentation of "Devastated France," a film history of the Good Will delegates' tour of France.

Tom Joy, former local Metro salesman, has sold his interest in the Hippodrome, Carthage, N. Y., to J. M. Schine of Gloversville, N. Y.

Walter Hays, Mark-Strand official, with offices in Buffalo, is enjoying a motor and hunting trip in the Adirondacks.

Buffalo voters decided to retain Daylight Saving by some 20,000 plurality. Exhibitors had worked hard to kill the measure, which they claim cuts into their business about 50 per cent. John L. Kelly, secretary to Mayor Frank X. Schwab, directed the campaign for the exhibitors.

Albert Hay Malotte, the new Shea Hippodrome organist, was enthusiastically received last week, when he showed the possibilities of the new Wurlitzer organ to patrons. The only objection was that he did not change his program the last half of the week, when the rest of the bill was changed and many folks who heard him the first half of the week had to sit through the same program. He promises to give a new program the last half of this week.

Buffalo Film Row News

IT'S a tough life these Paramount district managers live. Allan S. Moritz, manager of the Buffalo office, had to leave Thursday, November 16 on a special train for Los Angeles in company with other F. P.-L. moguls. Mr. Moritz thinks that he will be able to stand the strain of the long trek across the country.

Frank Young, booker at Select, has been appointed local correspondent of "The Brain Exchange," the Selznick house organ. Frank was wondering what he could send in. It was suggested that Frank Moynihan raised enough h—— to keep any correspondent busy. For he's a jolly, good fellow!

"Vic" the Paramount shipping executive, was in charge of the battery of machines which projected the films from the Evening News office on the large screen in Main street on Election Night. Al Becker supplied the machines and the films.

W. A. V. Mack, Pathe pilot, is planning some great business getting stunts for the Eschmann Drive which opens soon. It will be a big surprise if Buffalo doesn't capture first prize. Basil Brady, debonnair Pathe salesman, was operated on last week for his annual hair trim. Basil has been so busy selling film that he plum forgot his locks were creeping down his neck.

Harry Buxbaum of Paramount paid his usual bi-monthly visit to the local office last week and got Allan S. Moritz all worked up telling him of the fun they were going to have on that trip to the Golden Gate.

Ralph Mau, former assistant booker at Paramount, and recently a salesman with Macmy Pictures and Niagara Pictures, is now aiding Archie Moses of American Releasing as a salesman.

In Cleveland's Film Center

ROBERT LIEBER, president of First National, was Cleveland's most distinguished guest last week. While Mr. Lieber's visit here was personal, and not in the interest of First National, his Cleveland First National associates took upon themselves the pleasant task of arranging a luncheon in his honor, at the Athletic Club, at which local press representatives and local First National officials were present. Mr. Lieber left Friday for Indianapolis.

Leon D. Netter, one-time Cleveland exchange manager, and now field representative for the Al Lichtman production was back in town several days this week. This was Netter's first visit to Cleveland since he left here two years ago. His right arm was lame from the many shakes of his old friends.

The local Famous Players bunch including Eddie Fontaine, exchange manager; Aaron Wayne, city salesman and Herbert Krause, special representative, were all out on location this week. There was a double plot on hand. One was to pick up stray contracts that had been overlooked. The other was to try out three new automobiles, which had just been acquired by the trio.

William Muir, who was with the Indianapolis Famous Players Exchange is now hooked up with the Cleveland Hodkinson office in a sales capacity.

Aaron Wayne, in charge of city sales for Famous Players-Lasky, went down to Columbus for a week or two, to conduct a series of sales conferences.

Robinson Bell has resigned from the Pittsburgh Paramount office to become associated with the Pittsburgh Goldwyn exchange.

Mike Vogel, well known in the Missouri territory, where he was connected with Paramount, has been transferred to Pittsburgh to succeed Bell.

Robert Cotton, manager of the local Fox exchange, personally called on the few exhibitors in the territory who had failed to sign up for the Fox specials and successfully showed them the error of their judgment.

The Film Board of Trade of Cleveland has been successfully functioning for the past eight months. They say they have arbitrated every difficulty that has arisen between exchanges and exhibitors to the complete satisfaction of all. Such a state of complete success was worthy of a party, so all the members of the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland, with their wives, or sweethearts celebrated on Saturday night, beginning with a dinner at the Hana Restaurant, followed by a theatre party at B. F. Keith's new nine million dollar Palace Theatre, and an after-theatre snack at the Carlton Terrace. In the language of the society column, "a good time was enjoyed by all."

Cleveland Bulletin

Joe Calla, manager of the Strand theatre, Canton, was in town one day last week. Calla brings with him the glad tidings that the picture business in Canton is great.

Jim Tollman, manager of the Victoria, Steubenville, is Ohio's prize traveller. Tollman claims to be the only film man in existence who takes the round trip from Steubenville to Cleveland and back again in one day. It's only 85 miles from Steubenville to Cleveland. But it takes five hours each way. That includes a change on the way.

Art Himmelein, well known all through Ohio both as an exhibitor and as a film salesman, has bought the Plaza theatre in Sandusky. Himmelein has done the whole house over—paint, carpets, furnishings and equipment—and on December 1st will be ready to show the people of Sandusky, at the rate of 1000 at a time, that "hard times" is only a state of mind, and not a condition of the motion picture business.

Mike Mastandre has just built a new 600 seat motion picture theatre on Mayfield Road, Cleveland. The house, located in the heart of a settlement of 30,000 Italians, opens this Saturday. Mastandre chose for his premiere, "Blood and Sand," a picture well suited to the tastes of his patrons.

An inquiry among the leading motion picture exhibitors of the city reveals the fact that the neighborhood houses are doing more business, proportionately, than the big down town houses. The reason for this is lower admission prices. The public is hard-up. It shops for its entertainment. Not only that, according to one exhibitor who owns a chain of neighborhood houses and who knows what he's talking about, but when they hit upon the show they want to see, they wait until it comes to a neighborhood house where they can see the same attraction for less than half what it would cost were they to go down town to see it when first released.

Oscar Kantner, follows Vogel in the St. Louis Paramount office. Kantner was previously with Paramount in Detroit.

St. Louis Close-Ups

George Beban of "The Sign of the Rose" had a great time while in St. Louis for an engagement with his combined film and stage act at the Delmonte Theatre. Mayor Henry W. Kiel took personal charge of Beban and saw that he took in everything worth while in the Mound City.

"The Sign of the Rose" bears the distinction of being the only act that was ever brought back a second run engagement at the Delmonte. Beban and his company broke all house records at the Delmonte, which is the largest one-floor theatre in the world, seating more than 3,000 persons.

Visitors to St. Louis the past week included Max Roth, Jackie Coogan Productions; Joe Bryant of C. B. C., and V. P. Whitaker, representing Thomas H. Ince.

It is said that poor patronage as caused John Koetting, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Ste. Genevieve, Mo., to decide to close his doors. The Lyric has experienced a severe slump in attendance during the past several weeks. There is much unemployment in Ste. Genevieve.

Universal's Jewel production, "The Storm," adapted from Langdon McCormick's celebrated stage play, and starring House Peters, will be the first picture to be shown in the new Rivoli Theatre, a new downtown house in St. Louis, word has been received at the Universal home office. The new theatre is expected to open its doors next week.

The new Rivoli, it is understood, is a new house built upon the site of the old Royal Theatre. It will be a first run house, and is said to be one of the most artistic theatres in St. Louis.

Romaine Fielding is producing commercial and other short-length films in his new studios at 6700 Delmar Boulevard under the firm name of "Quality Films." He is

Kansas City Flashes

In J. D. Bowersock, Sr., Kansas has lost one of the most widely known pioneers in the film industry in the Middle West. Mr. Bowersock, who died last week at his home in Lawrence, Kas., was 80 years old and built the first playhouse in Lawrence, the home of the state university, the Bowersock Opera House, which burned in 1911 and was replaced by the Bowersock theatre, a modern structure. Mr. Bowersock's career, aside from that of an exhibitor, runs all the way from the mayoralty of Lawrence to a seat in congress.

A unique surprise was given Theodore Roberts before he departed from Kansas City last week, where he made personal appearances on the Orpheum circuit. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts were entertaining friends at the Hotel Muehlebach when the hotel chef presented the film star with a candy reproduction of "The Old Homestead," containing every detail, even the door knob. The gift was from the management of the hotel.

With St. Louis Branch Offices

J. B. DUGGER is the new Goldwyn manager in St. Louis. He succeeds Jack Weil who has been transferred to New York on a special job. Dugger for the past four years was with Famous Players in Detroit. Before that he was at the Indianapolis exchange.

Eddie Dustin, former Pathe and Hodkinson manager here, who has been in ill health for many months has practically recovered his strength. He has been tendered the position of business manager of the Mid-West Productions Company. Hasn't decided whether to accept. The local film colony would like to see Eddie back in harness again. Every one likes him.

Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois rights for "Sure Fire Flint" controlled by Mastodon Film Corporation, has been obtained by First National. It will have its first run at the Delmonte theatre.

Jack Storey, Pathe special representative, is a benedict. He was married to a Joplin, Mo., girl on November 1. He and his bride are on their way to the Pacific Coast.

Another visitor of the week was H. Weber of Sessor, Ill. Other out-of-town callers included: C. C. Jones, American, Cambria, Ill:; Chester Calvin, Opera House, Washington, Mo., and T. McNamara, Rex, Virden, Ill.

Fred Hoelzer has opened the Margarette theatre, 7300 Virginia avenue. This house had been dark for several months. Hoelzer also operates the Ivory theatre, at Virginia and Ivory avenues.

Around Kansas City Exchanges

A SURPRISE party for L. W. Alexander manager of the Kansas City Universal branch, was given last week by employees of the exchange and a platinum ring was presented Mr. Alexander. Among the guests were: Lee D. Balsey, Art Gebaur, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Taylor, Miss Rose Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. A. Recob, Mr. and Mrs. H. Valentine, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kirschbaum, J. W. Frazier, and Miss Catherine Lish.

Thomas O. Byerle, former Vitagraph branch manager, is the latest addition to the sales force of the Kansas City First National branch. He will cover the key towns, selling the open market product.

Joe Bloustein, who discarded his apron in the Kansas City First National branch only a few days ago to become a salesman, has made his initial debut as the proud owner of a Ford coupe and does not even "bat an eye" when he asserts that he intends to cover more territory than any of those who have gone before him.

With the Seattle Branches

TWO of the new series of Goldwyn pictures were given first run bookings in this territory recently. "Remembrance" was booked by Frank Steffy's Coliseum theatre and "The Sin Flood" by Leroy V. Johnson for the Liberty. "Remembrance" teaser ads have been running in Seattle papers for several weeks past.

"Sherlock Holmes," the third of the Goldwyn features, is scheduled for a showing soon at the Strand theatre.

"Kindred of the Dust," "White Shoulders," "Skin Deep" and "East Is West" are four of First National's new releases that are being or will be exhibited in Seattle in Jensen-Von Herberg theatres.

"Rags to Riches," the first Warner Brothers production to be handled locally by the newly organized L. K. Brin exchange has been booked with the Jensen-Von Herberg circuit for showing in Seattle and Portland during the month of December, according to an announcement made by Mr. Brin. The Brin exchanges will handle Warner Brothers pictures exclusively. Exchanges are being opened in Denver, Salt Lake City and Portland by Mr. Brin, who is handling the pictures in the four Northwestern states, Washington, Oregon, Utah and Colorado.

George Bradley, publicity and exploitation manager for Universal Exchanges in Seattle and Portland, left the city recently for a short jaunt around the local territory to put over several new Universal features, including "Under Two Flags." He visited Tacoma, Bellingham, Everett and other towns around the state.

Seattle Brevities

Vic Gauntlet, general head of all advertising, publicity and exploitation for John Hamrick's circuit of theatres in Washington and Oregon left the city recently on a trip around the entire circuit.

He expects to be gone for a period of two or three weeks, during which time he will visit the Blue Mouse theatres in Tacoma, Wash.; Portland and Astoria, Oregon. While in Astoria he will also start things off at the Star theatre, which was recently acquired by Mr. Hamrick from Cy Danz.

Sunday morning symphony concerts began for the fall and winter season at Manager Frank Steffy's Coliseum theatre here recently, and the first concert was enthusiastically received by a large audience.

The concerts are given from 12:30 to 1:30 P. M. every Sunday by the thirty-piece Coliseum symphony orchestra, under the direction of G. Harry Stone, an Australian violinist, composer and leader who joined the local organization a few months ago, replacing Arthur Kay, now in Chicago.

Mr. Stone was associated for a number of years with the Royal Philharmonic Society and the Sydney Symphony Orchestra and Lismore Operatic Societies in Australia. His selection of numbers for the concerts includes about six classical pieces, both heavy and

As a special Halloween feature, Manager Leroy V. Johnson of the Liberty theatre, had all his girl ushers and cashiers specially attired. The girls wore orange silk dresses, with figures of cats, witches, brooms and pumpkins cut out of black silk and sewn on the dresses in irregular fashion. High black and orange caps, with paper tassels, finished up the scheme.

Photoplay adapted from famous books announced for showing by Seattle theatre managers during National Book Week, November 12 to 18, include "Sherlock Holmes," booked by Manager H. B. ## San Francisco Items

Harry Thorn, formerly head organist at the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Oregon, has just been employed as head organist at the California Theatre, San Francisco. Thorn is an experienced man, equally at home as a soloist and as an interpreter of photoplays. Emil Breitenfeld continues at the California as associate organist.

During the playing of "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" at the California Theatre, five thousand photographs of Thomas Meighan were given to the patrons. Leon Levy, assistant managing director of the Rothchild houses in San Francisco and well known along the Coast said: "The people were very pleased with these photos and we soon ran out of them because of the requests for them. I feel certain it paid to give them out, not only from the producers standpoint but from the theatre manager's standpoint as well."

Geraldine Groce, popular publicity director at the Granada Theatre, has returned from a few weeks vacation in Southern California. During her vacation Miss Groce not only went on long hiking trips but studied special publicity stunts as well. "We must do that to keep up," she said.

While walking near his place of business at Rosenberg, Teaxs, on the night of October 14, Mart Cole, proprietor of a local theatre at that place, was seized by masked men, placed in an automobile, taken about five miles from town and severely beaten. This is the second flogging given Cole during the past month.

The Big Band Theatre at Alpine, Texas has ben reopened by C. D. Stewart.

Rialto Theatre at Pecos, Texas, has been leased by Glenn R. Hampton and Jack Wingate.

E. L. Mosive has been appointed manager of the Aldine theatre at Robstown, Texas.

F. S. Ferguson has reopened the Royal theatre at Victoria, Teaxs.

Around the Detroit Exchanges

THE F. I. L. M. Club and the M. P. T. O. of Michigan, have united in a campaign with the purpose of eliminating the "bicycling" of film. While such a condition is by no means general, the two organizations realize that a dishonest exhibitor is as bad as a dishonest producer, and that clean business methods are as necessary as clean pictures, if this industry is to present to the public the record of which it is capable. The campaign has only been started. More developments are expected in the future.

The Michigan Screen Club is a new organization, with aims purely social. The members are the exhibitors, theatre managers, exchange managers and representatives, and others connected with the picture business in the state of Michigan. The entire second floor of the building at 47 Elizabeth Street, East, Detroit, Mich., has been leased and will be newly decorated and furnished, with smoking, reading and lounging rooms and everything that goes to make a first-class club. Business and all discussions thereof will be strictly taboo.

The Metropolitan Picture Corporation, which makes industrial films, and the Detroit Free Press News Weekly, has moved from 47 Elizabeth Street, East, to the Joseph Mack Building, thus, not only enlarging its quarters but its business, as the corporation has bought out the Nelson company, which was engaged in the same line of producing.

Harold Lloyd, as "Grandma's Boy," has taken Detroit by storm. The Fox-Washington, where he is being seen, has played to the S.R.O. sign for the past three weeks. Ray Miller and his jazz band shared honors with Harold. Next week he makes way for the Goldwyn film "Remembrance."

Royal Oak, a suburban town of Detroit, and with a population of seven thousand, has definitely moved out of the daily change of bill, at least where the better pictures are concerned. Recently "The Prisoner of Zenda" played at the Baldwin for three days and the "Orphans of the Storm" at the Royal for four days. Both films did excellent business.

George D. "Dad" Strong, veteran circus and film man, has just died in his home in Minneapolis, Universal reports. Strong has been on the Universal payroll for many years, although he has been able to do little actual work for some time. He was 80 years old at the time of his death.

According to J. V. Bryson, Universal Export Manager, who knew him intimately, Strong was the pioneer film man of the North West, having shown the first motion picture in that territory. He later became associated with the Laemmle Film Service, joining that organization the day its Minneapolis branch was opened, fourteen years ago.

Strong traveled with Barnum's circus for many years. He was known as Viovanni, the Bird Trainer. Later he became a singer and a lecturer, before taking up motion pictures in their pioneer days. He was born in Ohio in 1842.

In San Francisco's Film Center

H. G. ROSEBAUM, manager of the local Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned from a combined business and pleasure trip to New York and Chicago. While in New York, Mr. Rosebaum discussed several important matters with the company's main office and in Chicago visited with his relatives and his old home. "It is certainly a pleasure to return to San Francisco," said Mr. Rosebaum, "and the East is daily considering this section the real big one on the Pacific Coast."

Ed Armstrong of the Universal, who has just completed the circuit, comes back filled with enthusiasm. He stated conditions were encouraging and he found that optimism was on the upward trend.

Under the direction of Morgan A. Walsh, general manager for the Federated Film Co., $3000 worth of bill advertising has been posted in California, Nevada and Arizona, promoting Warner Brothers new product, "Seven Books." This is considered the biggest bill board advertising campaign ever attempted in this territory. The posting sheets will stay out one month.

It has just been announced by the Federated offices that all Warner Brothers 1922-23 productions have been sold in first run San Francisco houses.

Motion picture companies have just expressed their gratitude to W. L. Maynard, manager of the Southern Pacific Hotel at Truckee, that they will be able to make use of the virgin backgrounds of Lake Tahoe and surrounding timber country.

The Rialto theatre at Houston, Texas has reduced its admission prices to 10 and 20 cents for matinees and 10 and 25 cents for night performances.

Fire partially destroyed the Majestic theatre at Blooming Grove, Texas, evening of October 27th.

The Folly theatre opened at Duncan, Okla., Nov. 1, to pleased capacity business. The Folly is modern in every particular, has 500 comfortable opera chairs, and the decorations and lighting effects are harmonious and pleasing throughout.

Indiana Chatter

Philip Holtzman, formerly owner of the American theatre, has purchased the lease from the American Amusement Company and has reopened the theatre, which is located on Main street, with popular prices, 10 and 20 cents, prevailing.

The sale of the lease to Mr. Holtzman marks the passing of the American Amusement Company in the Evansville show field.

The company formerly operated the Strand theatre here, but the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation recently purchased this house.

The Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation also operates the Victory theatre here. The Victory, which formerly featured pictures and three acts of vaudeville, has been changed into a straight vaudeville house and the Strand theatre now has the Victory policy of pictures, but does not have vaudeville.

The Grand theatre, which featured vaudeville last year, is now playing stock.

Road attractions which come to Evansville are showing at the Strand theatre, the picture policy being abandoned on nights legitimate attractions are in the city.

Washington Paragraphs

William H. Robinson, manager of the Plaza theatre, Milford, Delaware, was injured in an automobile collision, near Frederick, Delaware, last week.

The Polonia moving picture theatre, Maryland Avenue, Wilmington, Delaware, owned by the United Amusement Company, was sold for $40,000 to Charles B. Evans, attorney of Wilmington. Sheriff Joseph H. Gould conducted the sale at public auction in the New Castle courthouse, Wilmington, last Saturday. Having obtained a judgment of $25,000, the Security Trust and Safe Deposit Company had to sell.

Business during the four-week run of the picture, "When Knighthood Was In Flower," has so packed the Columbia in Washington, that Manager Gates and the staff are hoping for normalcy so they won't have to work relays on the box office, cash register, and ticket chopping devices. Doors have been opened at 2:30 instead of the usual 10:30 a. m.

Harry Crandall is still maintaining his policy of popular admissions, and although "Nero," the current attraction, showed in New York at a top of $1.50, there will be rigid adherence to his permanent policy for this one-week run and other premieres to follow. Doors opened at 2 P. M. Sunday.

It is understood that the new Chevy Chase theatre is to be opened on Christmas Day, as some delay has occurred in arrival of fittings and also due to changes in the plans, o that the new house may be a nodel and a civic institution in the xclusive residence section.

Miss Gorman is busy in her half dozen ilm comedies, now being "shot" by the Washington photoplay producers.

Rhode Islands Notes

The theatres in Providence, especially the moiton picture houses, nade much of election night. Every photoplay house in the city had an announcer who gave returns of the voting as fast as received. The Rialto and Victory offered special shows, starting at 10:30 p. m. and did a thriving business, especially n view of the fact that rain drove he anxious hundreds in from the street.

Miss Clara Blaney, who for three years was the press representative of the E. F. Albee interests in Providence, is now grinding out publicity for the Strand, Modern, Capitol and Bijou theatres. Miss Blaney is one of the most popular press agents in the city, and editors are always pleased to see her stuff coming.

James C. Thornton, who erected Thornton's theatre in Riverpoint, a suburb of Providence, died Nov. 10, after a long illness. Mr. Thornton had done much for the theatre in his district and had the reputation of running the cleanest pictures he could procure. During his younger days he was keen for sports and was an all-round athlete.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" entered its second week at the Shubert Majestic theatre, Nov. 12. The first week produced satisfactory results, and now that the picture has been well "talked up," it is believed that the second week will be a still bigger success than the first. A feature of the exploitation is the placing in windows of various exhibits procured during the filming.

The Pine Hills theatre in Albany, which changed hands a couple of weeks ago, has started in with double features. The same policy is being followed a good part of the time by the Barcli and the Albany. Fred Elliott, of the Clinton Square theatre in Albany, was the first to try out double features in this section, as a means of bracing up his patronage. When Mr. Elliott's plan made good, others followed suit.

Burr Studio Hums with Activity

New Feature "Flaming Drum" Under Way; Third All-Star Comedy Begun

THE C. C. Burr Studio in Glendale is a veritable hive of industry these days judging from the enormity of production that the Burr organization is promulgating at this time. Aside from the next Johnny Hines feature comedy-drama "Luck" that is being "shot" at the studio, producer Burr is also importantly concerned with executive supervision of the "Flaming Drum" which Edgar Lewis is now producing at the studio with such stars as Doris Kenyon, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese and little Russell Griffin, all of whom appeared to such excellent advantage in support of Johnny Hines in "Sure-Fire Flint." Edeson, Breese and that talented youngster Russel Griffin, who was hailed as a second Jackie Coogan for his rich and varied interpretations in "Reported Missing" with Owen Moore and in "Sure-Fire Flint" with Johnny Hines, are all ready at work at the studio, where production began last week. Doris Kenyon will, in all probability begin work in her important role the early part of this week. Her role in "Flaming Drums" is reported to be the most pretentious of her highly successful screen career, and both Lewis and Burr feel that she will more than do justice to the important part assigned her. While Producer Burr has not definitely announced the names of the other prominent members of the cast for this production, it is reported that the industry in general will be pleasantly surprised when the complete cast is announced shortly. This is in line with C. C. Burr's standard policy of a big cast, big story and big director for each of his feature productions.

Production on the third of the "All-Star" comedies is also under way at the studio with Ray McKee, Charlie Murray and Mary Anderson in the feature roles. The first two of the series, respectively titled "Faint Heart" and "The Four Orphans" have already been accorded test showings at the Gotham Theatre in New York City and have been very favorably received.

"The Darling of the Rich," Second of Series Soon Ready for Exhibition

B. B. PRODUCTIONS, INC., announces that the second Betty Blythe picture in the series of four State Rights productions has been completed and will be ready for exhibition within the next two or three weeks.

The title of this picture is "The Darling of the Rich," an original story especially devised for Miss Blythe, and written by Dorothy Farnum, who is now doing Marshall Neilan's script for "Tess of the D'Urbevilles." "The Darling of the Rich,' it is claimed, is more elaborate even than the first Blythe production, "How Women Love," which has been exhibited in the New York City territory for the last two weeks with success.

The cast for "The Darling of the Rich" includes, in addition to Miss Blythe, Gladys Leslie, Charles Gerard, Montague Love, Leslie Austin, Walter Walker, Julia Swayne Gordon, Jane Jennings, Albert Hackett, Rita Maurice and Arthur Gowin.

At the same time as B. B. Productions, Inc., announces the completion of "The Darling of the Rich," this company also announces preparations for the third Blythe picture, which has heretofore been advertised under the title of "The Girl Who Got Everything," but which will be produced under the title of "The Garden of Love." This is a high society melodrama of extremely emotional character.

Edith Roberts Returns to New York

Edith Roberts arrived in New York last week, having left the coast immediately upon completion of her work in B. P. Schulberg's production "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" to fill an engagement to play in a forthcoming release of Distinctive Productions.

In her latest picture "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" which Gasnier directed, she is featured along with Estelle Taylor and Kenneth Harlan.

"Success" All Ready for Cutting

WORK of cutting "Success," the big special feature directed by Ralph Ince for Murray W. Garsson, Inc., will be begun next week.

The production, adapted from the Broadway stage hit of the same name, has been over three months in the making. From the outset, and as the picture progressed, Mr. Garsson, Mr. Ince, the players—in fact everyone concerned with the making of "Success" were unanimous in agreeing that the picture would be one of the biggest of the year—a production that would really be remembered.

Hence the original time schedule was abandoned and while the production cost is practically double that estimated for the picture, the results achieved are said to be more than commensurate for the time, labor and money expended.

No announcement regarding distribution arrangements on "Success" has been made by Mr. Grasson's office.

Warner Floats Helping "Rags to Riches"

"Rags to Riches," the Warner Brothers picture featuring Wesley Barry, is said to be blazing a trail of approval throughout the country, and manifestations of this fact are evidenced in the many telegrams being received at the Warner offices. The Warner Brothers transcontinental float advertising their seven forthcoming productions is said to have aided in putting over a big campaign for the Broadway Strand, Detroit.

The floats have been built by the Warner's to advertise their productions. One is en route to the coast, and the other is aiding exhibitors put over the picture in the east. Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand, wired the Warner offices as follows: "Opened 'Rags to Riches' to absolute capacity all day long including supper show. Big opposition at other houses."

M. Fitzer, manager of the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, wired: "'Rags to Riches' holds my box-office record for the Empire Theatre."

"Luck" Said to Be Unusually Humorous

Producer C. C. Burr, sponsor for the Johnny Hines features, promises some extraordinarily humorous moments in the next Hines special, temporarily titled "Luck," from the story by Jackson Gregory. One of the big punches in this next feature comedy-drama occurs during a fight scene with the ever-funny Charlie Murray creating no end of laughs in conjunction with Flffiora Finch and Polly Moran, both of whom are cast prominently. Violet Mersereau is seen as Hines's leading woman in "Luck." Also included in the cast are Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson, Joe King and Mathew Betts.

Production plans call for the completion of "Luck" about the seventh of December and releases to territories will go forward no later than January 1 of next year.

Warners Offer Many Accessories

Unique Advertising Novelties Designed for "The Beautiful and Damned

AN unusual number of advertising accessories are said to have been devised for the Warner Brothers' production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," featuring Marie Prevost. The picture was directed by William A. Seiter, and it was adapted for the screen by Olga Printzlau.

An eight-page broadside press sheet, containing novel ideas for exploitation and publicity purposes, has been compiled by the publicity department. In addition to the many angles of publicity the lithographs and the advertising novelties are declared to be distinctly out of the beaten track.

The lithographs were especially drawn by Bennett Prival, a well-known German poster artist, who is said to have injected into the work a process that has never been used in this country.

For exploitation purposes exhibitors will have at their disposal what is declared to be a unique telephone doll in striking colors, with regular billing matter and space on bottom for theatre names, suitable for use on all telephones. The other advertising accessories include a series of three window cut-outs of original design. To carry out the idea of the novel the exact reproduction of cover design on the book has been made into a door knob hanger, a sticker, and it has also been used to adorn the front page of a herald.

"The Beautiful and Damned" is said to reveal with devastating satire a section of American society which has never before been recognized as an entity.

News Trailer for "Notoriety"

Unique Exploitation Stunt Permits Tie-up with Live News of the Day

THE Advertising and Exploitation Department of L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North have added an extra trailer to the regular film teaser accompanying the accessories on their Will Nigh release "Notoriety." The second trailer is purely an exploitation "stunt" and was suggested by the title of the picture.

The connection of the daily newspaper with the title of the Weber & North release is natural, as the word notoriety automatically recalls newspaper headlines. With this association as their basis the propaganda staff of Weber & North have devised a publicity tie-up that combines the advantages of a screen announcement and a local newspaper hook-up. The exploitation trailer is simple and inexpensive and can be put in practice in every type of house and town, with minor changes due to local events.

The Trailer, which is altogether about 300 feet, opens up with the question—"Did you read this morning's Herald?"—The mention of the paper is part of the local press tie-up. Following the question a flash of the front page of the paper in question appears. The day's accounts of divorces, crime and sensations are prominent in the paper. Where there are not enough of such "notoriety" stories on the front page, the inside pages are flashed, with close-ups of the desired stories.

After each newspaper flash of a notoriety story, the printed account is illustrated with a scene. A murder story is followed up with a murder scene, taken from the picture "Notoriety," showing the society clubman in the story being shot in his room. A divorce headline in the local paper is illustrated with a scene of Maurine Powers, star of "Notoriety," showing her on the witness stand, defended by Rod La Rocque. Other parts of the film, such as the cabaret scene, the stage-dance, and the tenement house scene where the girl's guardian reads of her ward's involvment in the society crime, are also used to illustrate any similar episodes in the headlines of the local paper.

Territories Sold for Dick Talmadge Films

Depending upon melodrama, spectacle, mystery, pathos and music, it is claimed by Hopp Hadley that "Love's Old Sweet Song" gives promise of starting the new company off with a decided hit for its initial offering.

Prominent in the cast is Louis Wolheim, who starred in "The Hairy Ape," Donald Gallaher of George M. Cohan's "So This Is London," Helen Weir, Ernest Hilliard, Helen Lowell, Warren Cooke, John Tansey, Ray Allen and Baby Margaret Brown. The picture is in six reels.

Goldwyn in Touch with Field

Executives Giving Personal Attention with Frequent Calls on Exchanges

GOLDWYN executives are keeping in close personal touch with the branch exchange offices, their managers and sales force through swings about the country. James E. Grainger, personal representative of F. J. Godsol, president, was no sooner back from a trip, than W. F. Rodgers started out. He visited the Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha offices.

Mr. Rodgers returned early in the week and J. E. Flynn started on a trip that will cover the offices in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Buffalo.

By keeping in such close touch with the branch offices, executives are able to help solve without undue delay the problems of distribution and salesmanship which daily arise because of their familiarity with the conditions prevailing in the territory served by each branch and with the individuals comprising the staffs.

Then, too, with only a limited number of big super-features instead of the many "program pictures" of previous seasons, there are many new angles of salesmanship to be threshed out; in many cases the old methods are scrapped and new ways of approaching the exhibitor devised. It is a task to which Goldwyn is bringing new ideas and new enthusiasm and keeping them aroused through close personal touch.

Del Ruth Plans New Production

Acquires Balboa Studios and Will Produce Four Features and Comedies

THE Hampton Del Ruth studios, formerly known as the Balboa studios, where early motion picture history was made in Long Beach, California, were recently sold to a syndicate of Eastern capitalists.

The present policy of the studios, adopted when Hampton Del Ruth assembled his notable cast for "The Marriage Chance," will continue, and the productions will be distributed by American Releasing Corporation under the Hampton Del Ruth name.

Plans of the new company include the production of four feature pictures with casts as distinguished as that of "The Marriage Chance." Twelve two-reel comedies are also scheduled for production under the supervision of Del Ruth.

A tour of the country in a private car has begun, the object being to publicize not only the name of Del Ruth but that of Long Beach by means of photographs of the city and surrounding country. These will be distributed en route. The car will be thrown open to visitors everywhere it goes and the wonders of Southern California and Long Beach will be described and shown. Alta Allen, Milos Sills, Henry B. Walthall, Tully Marshall, Irene Rich and Mitchell Lewis—the cast of "The Marriage Chance"—will accompany the touring party for a portion of the journey.

"Women Men Marry" Sales Completed

That Edward Dillon's first big independent production "Women Men Marry" has hit a responsive chord in picture circles is evidenced by the fact that two of the biggest territories were sold during the past week. New York and Northern New Jersey was sold to the Renowned Pictures, Inc., while Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey were purchased by Robert Lynch of the Metro Exchange of Philadelphia.

The first foreign sale to be consummated was for Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania, which was signed by the Super Selected Pictures of Sydney, Australia.

At the offices of the Truart Film Corp., in New York, which is distributing "Women Men Marry" for Edward Dillon, inquiries are being received from all sections of the country.

Still Picture Book For "Only a Shopgirl"

The innovation of a special album press book composed simply of still picture scenes from the production was so successful when carried out by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation in connection with the launching of "More To Be Pitied," that this is to be a feature of all the exploitation campaigns, it is announced.

Accordingly a larger and handsomer leather-topped album giving in still resume a detailed idea of what the picture is about has been prepared, with the name "Only a Shopgirl" embossed on the cover, and is going out to every franchise holder of the features. The "Say It With Pictures" idea has met with enthusiasm both from exchange managers and for their convenience in showing exhbititors the idea of the picture.

Buyers in N. Y. to See "Woman in Chains"

Twenty independent distributors scattered over the United States, franchise holders in the Amalgamated Exchanges of America, Inc., will be in New York City Sunday, November 18, to witness the first showing of the "Woman In Chains" the first production to be made under the banner of the new company.

Distribution Contract Closed

Associated Exhibitors Will Handle Four Pictures Starring Madge Evans

EDGAR SELDEN, acting for Worth While Pictures Corporation, closed a contract this week with John C. Ragland, secretary of Associated Exhibitors, under which the latter organization will distribute four productions starring Madge Evans, the popular girl player.

Announcement was made that the first feature which will be completed for Associated release by the charming little actress will be "On the Banks of the Wabash," after the internationally known song classic by Paul Dresser. The cast, Mr. Selden declared, will be composed only of players of wide reputation, and no effort or expense will be spared to make the completed photoplay a work of supreme artistry.

"On the Banks of the Wabash" is in six reels, with continuity by Forrest Halsey, who wrote also the scenarios for the George Arliss triumphs, "Disraeli," "The Ruling Passion" and "The Man Who Played God." The story is described as of the homey, human, grass roots type, but with its thrilling moments also, giving Miss Evans opportunity for a full display of her wide versatility as an actress.

Madge Evans made her first appearance before the footlights when she was yet in arms. On the speaking stage she played child parts with the three Barrymores, among other stars, and her Mimsey, in "Peter Ibbetson," with John Barrymore, is especially well remembered. In pictures she appeared for a considerable time under the sponsorship of William A. Brady, more recently having important parts in five Prizma productions, notably in "Heida."

Miss Evans has spent her entire life in New York City, and with her parents continues to live in the house in which she was born. In all her work she has displayed an outstanding ability which, with her beauty and her unaffected, girlish charm, have endeared her to a legion of screen fans.

Films Shown with Election Results

For the first time in the history of motion pictures, high class attractions were shown to Election night throngs in Park Row, the home of American journalism, and were cheered with as much enthusiasm as were the returns. The New York Tribune, one of the oldest and most conservative newspapers in the United States, supervised the showing.

Included in the entertainment programme that filled the gaps between the arrival of election returns was Richard Barthelmess in "Sonny," Jackie Coogan in "My Boy," "Buster" Keaton in "The Boat," Ben Turpin in "Love and Doughnuts."

Newspaper Publishes Booking Sheet

The growing popularity of motion pictures is strikingly illustrated by an elaborate booking sheet of screen plays which is published each Sunday in the Baltimore News. This is a new departure for a newspaper. According to the film expert who prepares the booking sheets, it has proved a good circulation getter for the News.

The arrangement of the sheet is along the lines of schedule of baseball games usually published in the sporting sections of the daily papers. In the case of the motion picture booking sheet, all worth while picture plays that are to be shown in Baltimore and vicinity during the forthcoming week are scheduled.

The sheet for the week beginning Oct. 30 gives a striking instance of the popularity of First National Attractions, showing that First National has about 75 days out of approximately 288 days in Baltimore Theatres.

Hodkinson Has Strong Releases

Will Distribute Schertzinger Specials "Kingdom Within" and "Dollar Devils"

AN announcement emanates from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that "The Kingdom Within" and "Dollar Devils," two exceptional Victor Schertzinger specials, will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in the near future.

Both productions, in the estimation of the Hodkinson Officials, are ones with sympathetic appeal and interest that will make them decided attractions for the coming season. "The Kingdom Within" is a story by Kenneth B. Clarke and will be the next release on the Hodkinson program following "Bulldog Drummond." It is said to be particularly strong both from a production value and a box office point of view. The photography was done by Jole S. Stumar. The cast is composed of many well-known players of proven popularity. They are Russell Simpson, Pauline Starke, G. Walt Covington, Gaston Glass and Hallam Cooley.

"Dollar Devils," which follows "The Kingdom Within" upon the Hodkinson release schedule, likewise is a production that should find a place in the class of first-rate productions, it is said. It has a most unique theme which brings some real wholesome comedy to the fore, interspersed with thrills and heart interest. It is about a town that suddenly becomes rich through the finding of oil and with the added richness the quiet little village becomes a greedy, grasping place, the people losing all interest in one another in their effort to amass fortunes. How the oil dries up and the little town again becomes a haven of happiness and contentment is said to give this production a charm that the Hodkinson officials feel will make it one of the best productions of the year.

"Dollar Devils" has a cast consisting of such well-known names as Joseph Dowling, Miles McCarthy, May Wallace, Eva Novak, Hallam Cooley, Cullen Landis, Ney Farrell and Lydia Knott.

First National Films Endorsed

Birmingham Better Films Committee Lists Six First Nat'l Attractions

FIRST NATIONAL has been honored in a special manner by the Better Films Committee of Birmingham, Ala. The Better Films unit in Birmingham is one of the many similar bodies that are being organized in various parts of the country for the endorsement of films attaining the high artistic and moral standards adopted by these groups. The plan is the best antidote for censorship that has yet been launched and its work in behalf of "cleaner and better films" is proving highly effective. Among the first pictures endorsed by the new Birmingham Committee were six First National pictures, as follows:

"Sonny," with Richard Barthelmess, is an exceptional picture, and one which would be enjoyed by all Birmingham, young and old alike. In it Richard Barthelmess, who plays a dual role, is at his best.

"One Clear Call."—We consider the picture unexcelled on the screen. We take pride in the fact that such a wonderful photoplay is based on a book by an Alabama woman, Miss Frances Nimmo Greene.

"Kindred of the Dust."—An excellent picture. A dramatic production, realistically brought to the screen.

"The Eternal Flame."—An excellent picture of dramatic and artistic nature, particularly for adults.

"The Bond Boy."—We recommend "The Bond Boy" as a fine picture, strongly dramatic.

"The Masquerader." — Great. This is the strongest endorsement we can give to any picture. "The Masquerader" is the best picture the Committee has seen since it had been reviewing pictures.

All of these endorsements were used by exhibitors and by Mrs. Myrtelle W. Snell, City Amusement Inspector, to help bring people to those theatres showing the pictures. They were posted in hotels, clubs, schools, all libraries and published in three newspapers. They were announced at men's luncheon clubs, women's clubs and in one church.

Mary Pickford's "Tess" Praised

Metropolitan Critics Uniformly Commend Star's Work in New Production

THE opening of Mary Pickford's new picture version of "Tess of the Storm Country" at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, on last Sunday was hailed with uniform praise on the part of the Metropolitan critics. Comments from some of the reviews in the New York dailies follow:

"The new 'Tess of the Storm Country' is the greatest picture Mary Pickford ever made," said the critic for the Evening Mail. "It is more than that. It is one of the great pictures of motion picture history. Not spectacular, just human to the core, faithful to life, it reaches the heart, moving one to laughter or to tears at the impulse of the impish little figure about which it revolves. This new version fulfills every dream. It is the high water mark of the star's career."

"To say that we think 'Tess' was and is the best thing Mary Pickford has ever done is but to plagiarize, for it has been said many times before," said Don Allen in the Evening World. "Pictures have progressed and Miss Pickford's new 'Tess' has kept abreast of the rush of the times. Miss Pickford in her latest edition of the famous picture far outshines the Mary Pickford of eight years ago. And that, in itself, is the highest praise we can give. The entire picture seems to breathe the one word 'better.'"

"The new version of 'Tess of the Storm Country' is the finest achievement of Mary Pickford's career," said the reviewer for the Evening Telegram. "The story is closely knit and the pictures, as they melt before the eye, are rich in atmosphere and beauty."

"Mary Pickford's recreation of 'Tess of the Storm Country' is not only a vast improvement on her first picturization of this story, but it surpasses infinitely most movies that are now in their first blush," said the New York Sun's review. "It seems by far the best picture ever turned out by a film actress, and for an extremely adroit fusion of pathos, comdey and melodrama, it has all the other feminine pictures sinking for the third time. Miss Pickford says it was a work of devotion to revive her best beloved role, and it was a labor of love for the crowds to see it and to wait for her appearance in such a mass that the police had to be called to curb their enthusiasm. You will enjoy this picture."

"Mary Pickford is just as winsome in 'Tess of the Storm Country' as she was eight years ago," says the New York American critic. "Improved methods of photography and filming have brought the present version of this picture up to the best standards of today. Miss Pickford is just the last word in charm and attractiveness."

New Insurance Policy Protects Producers

Useful Press Book Ready for "Dr. Jack"

NUMEROUS novelties as well as other exploitation and advertising ideas are offered for Harold Lloyd's latest pieture for Patne distribution in a press book which has just been issued.

There are few comedians who offer wider exploitation possibilities than Lloyd and most of the possibilities have been taken full advantage of. Doetors' preseriptions, lobby eutouts, street bally-hoos, newspaper shop tieups, high hat eut-outs, eyeglass cutouts and many others are suggested.

Colored lobby display photos and scenes in different sizes appear to be unusually attraetive. "Pep" phrases to attraet "patients," trailers, souvenir cabinet photos, display advertisements, Dr. Jaek's Happy Bags and other business getters are ineluded in the suggestions. In addition there are news stories and eritieisms; in faet a eomplete eampaign, whieh should be extremely helpful to exhibitors showing the pieture.

Urson, together with David Kesson, Neilan's chief cinematographer, will journey over the exact territory of Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles."

Leading Houses Book "Pawned"

J. Parker Read Jr. Production Gets Under Way on Fox Greater New York Circuit

"PAWNED," the big J. Parker Read, Jr., production which Select Pictures Corporation is distributing, has started its trip through the theatres of the country by grabbing off bookings in many of the leading houses. It has already started on the Fox Circuit in Greater New York and throughout the East and is firmly planted on a number of equally large circuits in the Middle West and West.

In the advertising and exploitation material gotten out by the Select Company, quite naturally considerable play was made on the title. One of the interesting exploitation accessories prepared was a replica in papier mache of a regulation pawnbroker's sign, with the three balls in gilt hanging from a black bracket; the word "Pawned," in gilt on a red panel, is the only lettering on the advertising piece which was designed principally to be suspended from the marquises of theatres in which the attraction was playing.

Jim Reilly, manager of the Select Branch in Kansas City, fired this wire through when he received his consignment of these pawnbrokers' signs: "The three-ball papier mache 'PAWN' ad is very effective. Put one up outside the exchange door this morning and within a half-hour four men came in with overcoats to pawn."

Laemmle Nine for Winter Release

Universal Announces New Group for Distribution Starting Christmas Day

A NEW group of nine pictures, to be released during mid-winter, is announced by the Universal Pictures Corporation, and will be known as the Laemmle Nine. Each of the pictures carries the personal endorsement of Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the corporation.

The Laemmle Nine is the third group of nine attractions in the Universal 1922-1923 release schedule. The first group, the Winning Nine, was released in August, September and October, and the second group, called the Prosperity Nine, is now being released. The Laemmle Nine will be released, one each week, beginning on Christmas Day.

The new release group contains pictures by several of Universal's leading stars, as well as several special cast pictures. In the order of their release the Laemmle Nine consists of "A Dangerous Game," starring Gladys Walton; "The Flaming Hours," a Frank Mayo picture; "The Ghost Patrol," with a special cast; "Kindled Courage," starring Ed (Hoot) Gibson; "The Scarlet Car," starring Herbert Rawlinson; "The Power of a Lie," with a special cast; "The First Degree," Letter," another Gladys Walton picture, and "The Gentleman From America," a second Gibson vehicle.

Mr. Laemmle reached Universal City during the making of this group of pictures. Several of them he saw in completed shape. Others he saw being edited and cut. A few were in the last stages of production. He spent many days in critical study of the group and suggested certain changes and improvements. Finally, he announced to his staff that they promised to be the greatest group of pictures ever released by Universal. He placed his unqualified approval on them.

De Mille Increases Idea Prizes

Eight Instead of One Offer Suggestions Worthy of First Consideration

EIGHT prizes of $1,000 each instead of one, are to be awarded in the Cecil B. DeMille contest for an idea for his next Paramount production. This is due to the fact that eight persons in widely scattered sections of the country have submitted ideas which Mr. DeMille wants to use.

The prizes announced for the contest when Mr. DeMille started it several weeks ago were $1,000 for first, $100 for second and $50 each for third and fourth. All the Paramount producer wanted was an idea expressed in as few words as possible so that he could adapt it for his next Paramount picture. The contest closed on November 1.

Mr. DeMille and the contest editor of the Los Angeles Times started going over the manuscripts submitted immediately afterwards, and several days ago the producer found one that he liked. Seven others equally acceptable soon turned up in the mass of correspondence, so Mr. DeMille, to retain all eight and eliminate any possible basis for dissatisfaction, decided to give the first prize to the eight, and award the other prizes also.

The names of the winners are to be announced November 19 when it is expected that all of the manuscripts will have been studied.

MacLean Affiliation Causes Stir

Alignment of Popular Star With Associated Exhibitors Well Received

THE announcement last week that Douglas MacLean is to be an Associated Exhibitors star caused a sensation among exhibitors and men in the industry generally, it is claimed.

Arthur S. Kane's recent trip to the Pacific coast had given rise to the prediction that he would align a number of new stars with his organization, and there was interested speculation as to the identity of the players whom he might enlist under Associated's banner. Whatever other developments may come from Mr. Kane's Los Angeles visit, it seems certain that none will be received with greater enthusiasm than the alliance with Mr. MacLean. Until J. C. Ragland, secretary of Associated, formally announced this tie-up, it had not been known that Mr. Kane, Mr. MacLean and the latter's business associates had conferred in Los Angeles, and that a contract was signed before the executive left the coast.

Always a popular player, Douglas MacLean's prestige has continued to enjoy a steady growth, and the most recently produced features in which he appears are declared to be the best he has ever done. Among the productions but lately completed and yet to be released are "The Hottentot," an adaptation of Willie Collier's stage triumph, and in which Mr. MacLean, portraying the principal role, is supported by Madge Bellamy; "The Sunshine Trail" and "A Man of Action."

Mr.2 MacLean's announced decision, in the selection of subjects for his Associate Exhibitors features, to use only successful plays or well-known stories by noted authors also has been received with enthusiasm by exhibitors.

Word from Associated Exhibitors is to the effect that announcement of the first MacLean feature for that organization may be expected soon It is known that he already holds options on two stage successes.

New Locations Found in California

The old saying that "every corner of California has been photographed" does not hold good in the case of new locations found by Robert North Bradbury who is directing "Forbidden Trails," a story from his own pen, featuring Jack Hoxie for Sunset Productions. Information received from the West Coast indicates that the opening day of the "Dr. Jack" run was one of the biggest in the history of the theatre.

The following wire was received at the Pathe Home Office from its representative in Los Angeles, following the premiere of the new Lloyd feature:

"Lloyd opening wonderful. Yesterday one of the Mission's biggest days. Today will break all house records. Mission, as you know, has played all big features for long runs. Lloyd bucking attractions like 'When Knighthood Was in Flower' and 'Robin Hood.' All theatres have good, strong attractions, but Lloyd line is block long each way."

From other sources it is learned that the opening of "Dr. Jack" even overshadowed the tremendous reception given "Grandma's Boy" when it had its premiere in Los Angeles. This production established the world record run of nineteen weeks at the Symphony theatre here.

Century is to Star Buddy Messenger

Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation, will shortly announce a series of small town boy stories featuring Buddy Messenger, the first of which will be called "Kid Gladiators." Among the supporting cast will be Marjorie Marcel and Joe Bonner. Stern brothers had been looking for a youngster to do regular boys' stories. Several were tried out, but they lacked screen personality.

Buddy, who has a large following of his own, has done both juvenile support and short subject work. He shared honors in many scenes with Lon Chaney as "Mista Bad Boy" in "Shadows," and also distinguished himself in The Fox Kid series, the Edgar series, with Helen Jerome Eddy in Jess Robbins "Oh Be Reasonable" and the Universal-Jewel "The Flirt."

Julius and Abe Stern will spare no expense in procuring the right scenarios for young Messenger; the entire series will be supervised by either one or the other members of the firm, and players of reputation will support him.

New "Leather Pushers" Ready

Universal Will Release Series of Six Ring Classics From Witwer Stories

"THE New Leather Pushers," a series of six more screen classics adapted from H. C. Witwer's inimitable prize ring stories, and translated to the screen for Universal by Director Harry Pollard, with Reginald Denny in the starring role, is ready for release, the Universal Pictures Corporation announces.

The same director, the same star and in many instances, the same supporting cast have been used in order to hold up to the high standard set by the first six "Leather Pusher" pictures. The new series is said to be even better than the first.

The first of the new series is called "Young King Cole." The series will be released at two week intervals. In the order of their release, they are: "He Raised Kane," "The Chickasha Bone Crusher," "When Kane Met Abel," "Strike Father, Strike Son," and "Joan of Newark."

"The Leather Pushers" made Reginald Denny a star. His great work as "Kid" Roberts, the millionaire prize fighter of the famous Witwer stories, stamped him as an actor of the first water, and as especially good in screen epics of the prize ring. Denny is a boxer of considerable ability, having been the heavy-weight champion of his brigade in the British Air Service during the war.

The fights he puts on for the screen are real "mills." In these fights, many well-known pugilists have appeared opposite him. Popular "box fighters" like Sam McVey, Jack Renault, Danny Hayes, Frankie Ryan, Bob Armstrong, Sailor Ivans and others have squared off against the Universal star in one or another of the series.

Campaign For "Fighting Blood"

National Advertising Planned With Running of Each of Witwer Stories

THE release of the series of F. B. O. "Fighting Blood" pictures will be preceeded by a national advertising campaign which will start immediately. H. C. Witwer is responsibe for the stories.

The campaign has been arranged so that the F. B. O. advertisement will run in each issue of Collier's, together with one of the Witwer's stories. There are twelve stories in this series.

While all of these pictures carry the same characters and the same theme, each is distinct and complete in itself and is not to be considered in any way as an episode. The twelve pictures will show the rise of young Gale Galen, a typical American youth, ambitious in his search for an education, from soda jerker to middleweight champion of the world.

This career carries him through a number of ring battles which will feature each individual picture. However, states F. B. O., these pictures will not be simply the history of a pugilistic career, but rather a wholesome story of American youth, its comedies and its struggles.

Two subjects have already been completed at the R-C Studios under the direction of Mal St. Clair, who was selected for this important position and taken from the Carter De Haven unit, where he had been directing the F. B. O. comedy star in his series of domestic two-reelers. The first is entitled "Fighting Blood," giving its name to the entire series. "The Knight in Gale," is the second picture.

Cameraman in Thrace Sends Pathe Negative

Brilliant air-views of burning farms in war-ravaged Thrace are screened in Pathe News No. 90. The same issue presents spectacular scenes of the forest fires which so seriously threatened inhabitants of the suburbs of Los Angeles that many residents are shown carrying their household goods to safer quarters.

The graphic pictures of the situation in Thrace, taken from a Turkish Army airplane, were secured by Georges Ercole, Pathe News cameraman, and are pictures covering the horrors of the burning of Smyrna. He is shown making his flying start from Constantinople, and audiences have the sense of accompanying him as he flies low over the Thracian country, with a panorama of burning farms whirling distinctly below.

"East Is West" in Third Week in S. F. Tivoli

"East is West" is entering its third week next week at the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco. Despite three days of heavy rain the showing during the second week was so exceptional that the decision to hold this First National attraction a third week resulted, bearing out pre-release predictions.

"Jungle Goddess" Sold in So. Western States

The Export & Import Film Company announces the sale of its Fifteen Episode Serial, "The Jungle Goddess" for Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas, also for Louisiana and Mississippi.

These territories were closed following the publication of the letter received by the Export & Import Film Company from the Eltabran Film Company, who purchased this serial for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, in which Mr. Brannon, the President of this concern, stated that "The Jungle Goddess" had been a life saver to his business. He further stated that he had played the serial in houses that had never run a serial before and at prices that were considerably higher than had ever been received from serial houses.

Arrow Will Distribute Tom and Jerry Series

Arrow Film Corporation will distribute a series of twelve one-reel subjects which will be known as the "Tom and Jerry Comedies." These little one-reelers were produced by Lloyd C. Haynes under the Roop patents and will be released one a month beginning December first. All the actors are clay manikins, the featured characters being Tom, a colored boy and Jerry his mule, and it is said that the reels are filled with laughs from beginning to end. They were recently given a pre-release showing at the California Theatre in Los Angeles and excited a great deal of newspaper comment. Arrow is arranging first run bookings in all the key-cities prior to placing the pictures on the State Right Market.

Two More Territories Buy Hallroom Series

The new Hallroom Boys Comedies, C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's series of two-reelers, were signed up in two additional territories this week.

The sales were to United Film Service of St. Louis, through Sam Werner, and to Crescent Film Service of Kansas City, the company headed by Al Kahn. This disposes of three more states, United taking the franchise to Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, and Crescent holding rights to Western Missouri and Kansas.

This leaves only one territory open on these comedies, C. B. C. announces.

"Taking Chances," a recent Hallroom Boys Comedy, was described by T. E. Edmundson, of the Lyric Theatre, Grangeville, Idaho, as a "two-reel pippin," and David Bernbaum, manager of the Dixie in Dallas, says that he is featuring them on his lights and advertising

Lighting for the Various Sections of the Theatre

Different Means Employed for Securing the Best Results

*By J. L. Stair

THE photoplay is becoming an instrument of culture with practically unlimited possibilities. With the growing appreciation of the public, the demand for special effects in the presentation of the photoplay is increasing. Resourceful producers and exhibitors are supplying the demands of a critical public for more genuine art and as a result the silent drama demands for its temple a specially constructed building of architectural magnificence equipped with the best mechanical devices, most perfect ventilation, and an attractive and harmonious system of illumination.

Because the theatre is used largely at night, light is one of the best means of making it attractive. The lighting of the theatre has ceased to be merely a matter of engineering detail. The illuminating engineer and others responsible for the lighting of a playhouse, must possess imagination. The illumination effects should be designed to supplement the drama by producing an atmosphere harmonizing with the play and not detracting from it.

Difference in Problem

The problem of lighting in the photoplay house differs in many ways from that in the so-called legitimate theatre, especially with reference to the auditorium, orchestra pit, stage and proscenium arch, and consists not so much in providing the proper and sufficient intensity of light, but in securing the correct gradation of light and color.

No attempt will be made here to trace the history of the theatre lighting art; the development of which has been, in the opinion of some, retarded by playhouse traditions; but to present some of the methods of present practice in theatre lighting. The development of lamps and their accessories has brought about many important changes in the lighting of this class of interior, and their application has taught us much about the value of lighting as a medium for advertising, as well as for artistic and spectacular effects.

The best results in the art of theatre lighting can be attained only by careful study of the various means that can be used, and by noting the effects of each method, on the actual operation of the house. The method that furnishes satisfactory illumination, that is novel and effective, is greatly desired by the prospective theatre owner.

It should be kept in mind that good lighting properly applied, will do as much as any other feature to elevate the theatre to the point of its maximum usefulness and attractiveness.

Lighting the Exterior

Even from a distance of several blocks away, patrons can be attracted to the playhouse by special lighting effects. The recent development of flood lighting, using projector units, provides the theatre owner a means of effective advertising in addition to the usual signs, etc. The system gives very attractive results at a comparatively small cost, and does not mar the building surface since in most cases the units can be placed in an accessible location at a considerable distance from the building.

The method of bringing the building into prominence by outlining with bare lamps has been used. Although this method is satisfactory in some cases, it does not light the building, but rather obliterates the details of design. The newer scheme for lighting the exterior, an example of which is shown in Figure 1, fixes the shape, design and location of the building on the mind of the observer. This in reality is the first step in the process of attracting the patron to the playhouse.

In some instances, the most effective results are obtained by combining outline lighting with the flood-lighting method. Architects are often willing to alter architectural details so that flood-lighting may be employed. In some cases special cornices are constructed or in others architects extend marquees out from the building for the accommodation of the flood-lighting projectors.

An illustration of a type of lighting unit that has been very successful for the flood-lighting of a theatre is shown in Figure 2. The flood-lighting projector is not designed to throw a concentrated beam such as is obtained with a searchlight, but rather to spread the lighting evenly over a large area. Projector units can now be obtained for use with lamps ranging from 200-watts up to 1,500-watts.

Entrance

A bright, warm, and attractive lighting scheme should be adopted for the entrance of the theatre. This is probably the brightest spot in the whole lighting scheme of the playhouse with the possible exception of the stage, and the lighting should therefore be carefully planned so as to have the maximum attractiveness with a minimum of glare.

One of the fundamental points to be kept in mind in planning theatre lighting is that the whole illumination scheme should be arrange

Weird Effect of Six Keyboards with Only Three Pianos

AN extremely striking act was employed by Edward L. Hyman, Managing Director of the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., when he used three grand pianos arranged with special mirrors, etc., so that to the audience there appeared to be six pair of hands and six keyboards playing on the stage. Nothing else was to be seen on the darkened stage. The act went over in such magnitude that it was continued for four weeks.

The apparatus required and the arrangement of same is of such a simple nature that it can be employed by most any theatre with sufficient stage. In fact, the size of the stage has little bearing as one piano or any number of pianos may be used to good effect.

The accompanying views give a comprehensive layout of the stage and also the arrangement used in placing the mirror and lights on each piano. It will be noted from Figure 2 that the pianos are arranged on the stage so that the hands of the artist playing the piano and the keyboard of the piano are in the view of the audience. From Figure 1 can be seen the simple arrangement of the lighting and mirrors used. In the front of each one of these musical instruments the lights are concealed in the trough-like arrangement on the top of the piano and allow the light to fall only on the mirror and down on the key board and the artist's hands.

It will be clearly appreciated that if there are no other lights on the stage and the artist playing the piano is dressed in black that no objects will be seen excepting the keyboard and a pair of hands along with their reflected image in the mirror. Everyone who saw this act commented on its weirdness.

Kurtz Made General Sales Manager of Bartola Organ Co.

K. G. KURTZ has just been advanced to the position of General Sales Manager for the Bartola Musical Instrument Company. Mr. Kurtz has earned this position by a long faithful service in the musical end of the motion picture industry. Mr. Kurtz's early life was spent in the musical end of the theatrical production and was started at a very early age as pianist for a hypnotic show. This was followed by a long series of adventures with various troupes until at about the age of twenty, he became musical director for Mr. B. C. Whitney who at that time had various musical successes on the road. Mr. Kurtz became general musical director for the Whitney Company and composed some of the song hits which were then in vogue.

When the motion picture industry first started, Mr. Kurtz drifted into that end of the business and claims to be one of the original drum and piano slammers of the good old motion picture days. Mr. Kurtz relates how for a long time he was manager of one of the first motion picture theatres in the City of Indianapolis where his duties consisted of posting the show in front of the theatre, relieving the operator during the supper show, helping to do the clean-up work in the morning and for ten hours a day slamming the old piano with the idea of making so much noise that it could be heard in front of the theatre to attract the people in off the street. Mr. Kurtz was attracted early to the possibilities of the pipe organ as used in motion picture theatres, and was one of the first motion picture theatre pipe organists that worked in the City of Chicago.

He became identified with the Bartola Musical Instrument Co. when the Company was organized—was the Bartola Company's first demonstrator and later had charge of the Company's school of players. It was at this time Mr. Kurtz developed business instinct which led to his advancement into business life and out of the musical end of the production. In the absence of salesmen, Mr. Kurtz closed several deals for instruments which gave him the incentive of becoming a salesman and for the last eight years has been in the sales end of the Bartola Company. The organization has grown very rapidly and has recently made a large extension to their factory and has added to their force of salesmen. Mr. Kurtz was selected to take over the sales management. He is following Mr. Dan Barton in this capacity who now finds, with the great growth of the Bartola Company and with the many other details, he can no longer handle this part of the work. He will have charge of the newly appointed sales office and demonstrating room of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company located at No. 314 Mallers Building, Chicago, Ill.

Reports Big Increase in Membership of Equipment Dealers' Ass'n

It has been reported by the chairman of the Membership Committee, Joe Hornstein, that the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America has been striking a splendid stride in securing memberships. From all appearances this association is going to be one of the leading features in the supply field. However, it is disappointing to note that the supply dealers in the New York district have not been as progressive and enterprising in submitting their membership to the association as various other districts.

A New Speed Record

One of the quickest installations of projectors on record is reported by the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, which prides itself on its service department.

The "continuity" briefly, was as follows:

On October 31, at 11:30 A. M., a North Side Chicago theatre placed a rush order for two Motiograph De Luxe machines with Manager Spahr, of Enterprise. He immediately gave instructions to his factory foreman to get busy, and at 11:50, or twenty minutes after the order was received, a motor truck left the factory with the machines and started on its five-mile drive to the theatre, where it arrived at 12:30 noon.

Expert mechanics, who had ridden out on the truck, immediately got to work and the machines that had been in use were torn down, the new battery of Motiograph De Luxe machines put in place, and had a picture on the screen at 2 P. M. sharp.

The projectionists at the theatre state that the machines gave perfect performances immediately following their installation and have run at every performance since without a hitch.

Manager Spahr states that he is proud of the record his staff made in this installation, but that it is only an example of what can be accomplished by a thoroughly efficient organization.

Fine Instrument Furnishes Music for Productions at the Hawaii

IN conformity with everything that The Consolidated Amusement Company are doing to give the public of Honolulu the very best that can be procured for the New Hawaii Theatre one of the outstanding features is the mammoth Robert Morton orchestral pipe organ.

Mr. Cohen, during his visit to the mainland, heard many types of organs, and finally decided on this particular instrument. The order was given for the very best model that the American Photo Player Co. could produce to conform with the size of the house.

The organ took six months to make, and three months to assemble in the specially built chambers of the theatre.

Mr. Gail Seward, one of the organ company's most expert workmen, was sent to Honolulu to do this work.

The organ is a four-manualed instrument, and contains 72 tablets or stops. Each tablet represents a different tone or pitch, all of these are distributed among the various rows of keys or manuals.

The heavy tones are all played with the feet and are called pedals. It can easily be realized what possibilities there are for the blending of innumerable tonal colors, together with the faintest whisper of music swelling to the glorious power of the full organ.

The pipes and effects are enclosed in two concrete weather and air-proof chambers, situated on either side of the proscenium arch. Facing the auditorium but covered with beautifully designed grill work are wooden shutters which are controlled by balanced pedals at the console, which is situated in the center of the orchestra pit.

These pedals are worked by the organist and are termed expression pedals, and have the effect of making the music increase or decrease at will. Beside the regular type of stops contained in the average organ, there are to be found on the Hawaii instrument, two sets of cathedral chimes, xylophones, orchestral bells, drums and cymbal.

In addition to the regular touch on the various keyboards, a new innovation is a second touch, by which various stops can be played in conjunction with those on the ordinary touch, by the organist pressing the keys a little harder and releasing another set of springs.

The console is set on a platform which can be raised or lowered at will by means of hydraulic power, the organist simply pressing a button at the keyboard.

What does light mean to you?

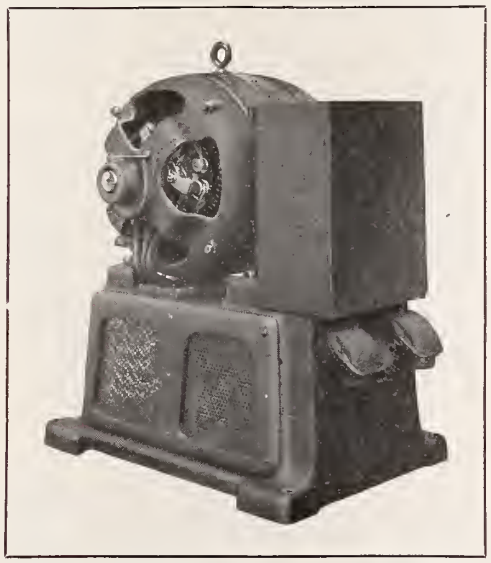
HOW important do you consider the light you use to project your pictures? Do you rank it with your decorations, appointments and conveniences?

Remember, there were moving pictures before there were high class moving picture theatres. But where would the industry be without light?

The light you use can make your pictures come out real, life like and pleasing to look at. Or it can cause flickers and "spots" that jump around in such a manner as to tire the eyes of your patrons and spoil their evening.

One of the most desirable qualities of light for motion picture projection is that it should be white. The whiter the light the clearer the picture. All light is produced by heat. And the hotter it is the whiter it is.



Wagner White-Light Converter, Type S. C. includes converter, transformer element and starting switch. Ballast resistance, polarity switch and ammeter are included as part of the equipment and furnished in separate units.

The temperature of positive carbon—used with the direct current arc of the Wagner White-Light Converter—is approximately 4000° C. compared with that of the Tungsten filament lamp which is only 2700° C.

Whiteness is only one quality of the light furnished by the Wagner White-Light Converter. We would like to discuss further this subject of Light, so vital to every theatre owner. But space here will not permit.

Our book "Light For Motion Picture Projection" is written for theatre owners and operators. It is well worth your reading. The form below is for your convenience in requesting a copy.

Determining Narrowest Part of the Light Beam Beyond Lens

WE have had several inquiries asking for information concerning the location of the narrowest part of the light beam from the projection lens to the screen. There have been many theories and practical proofs submitted concerning this subject and in most every case the conclusions to be derived from these discussions differ.

It was therefore with the idea of securing authentic data and reaching a conclusion which could be relied upon that the Editor requested Dr. William L. Story, Jr., formerly of the General Electric Company and at present consultant optical and electrical engineer at Clark University, Worcester, Mass., to give a simplified discussion and proof for the determination of the narrowest part of the light beam beyond the projection lens. It is recommended that this discussion as here presented, be carefully studied, as the proof is relatively simple provided a little time is taken in analyzing statements. The conclusions which are drawn from this proof are clearly stated at the conclusion so that no doubt pertaining to this subject should be left in the mind of the projectionists.—Editor.

The Proof

The figure represents diagramatically a section made by a plane through its optical axis of the light beam in and beyond a motion-picture projector. The section will, of course, depend somewhat upon the particular plane chosen, since the film aperture is not circular.

Let ABC be the condenser, FG the aperture and HI the projection lens of focal length HE, arranged along the optical axis BEHL as shown. In order to avoid complication due to the size and position of the light source, this is assumed to be sufficiently large and so situated, that the entire condenser appears illuminated when viewed from any point of the aperture. It is also assumed that the projection lens is a thin lens projecting a sharp image of the aperture at a distance so large that the aperture is approximately in the focal plane of the lens.

The usual graphical method may be employed to find the location of the image by the projection lens, of the edge C of the condenser. Since the lens HI does not change the direction of the rays through its optical center, a ray from C passing through H will continue on in the same direction; or CHP is a straight line. Again, since all rays falling on a lens from its focus are parallel when they emerge, the ray CE intersecting HI at M′ will leave the lens in M′Q parallel to the axis. The point M where CHP and M′Q cross is then the image of the Point C. Similarly N can be found to be the image of the point A and MLN is the image of the condenser. This means that all the rays from any single point of ABC will pass through a single point of MLN, and the size of the light beam at L will be the size of the image MLN.

It is obvious that if the ray CE meets the lens within its extreme diameter as shown in the figure, there will be rays such as CI striking the lens farther from the axis, which, since they, too, must pass through M, will be approaching the axis between I and M. In other words the diameter of the beam will be greater at all points between H and L than that of the image of the condenser. Similarly there will be rays CG striking the lens at J, which, also passing through M, will then be getting farther from the axis; that is, the diameter of the beam continually increases beyond the image of the condenser. Under these conditions the beam is, then, smallest at this image.

Suppose, now, the diaphragm of the projection lens is reduced till all that light is cut off which falls on the lens farther from the axis than some point K, closer to the axis than M′. This reduction of diaphragm, while decreasing the brightness of the image at MN, will, of course, change neither its size nor position. The beam diameter at the projection lens has, however, been reduced to twice HK, and since the ray KM is getting farther from the axis as it leaves the lens, the beam is now smallest at the lens.

Conclusions

It will be seen from the above that the smallest section of the light beam from a motion picture projector is at the projection lens or at the image by this lens of the condenser, according as a line drawn from the edge of the condenser through the center of the aperture strikes inside or outside the free aperture of the projection lens when it focuses the aperture on a distant screen. If this line strikes the extreme edge of the free aperture of the projection lens, the beam will be the same size as lens to condenser image.

Submits Samples

The editor has received a letter from a projectionist in Grenada, Miss., who submitted samples of gaskets which he is making for use in the Power's 6B intermittent oil well. This projectionist has also submitted a few remarks concerning why he has gone to this trouble.

Dear Sir:

Enclosed you will find two gaskets which I am making for use in the Power's 6B intermittent oil well, that is, the gasket is to fit in between the case and the cover of the well. You will notice that these gaskets are a little heavy. Well, that is for the specific reason to give the user more service, as I find that they last longer than a gasket of lighter weight. In fact, one of these gaskets has been doing steady oil retaining for the last year in one of my machines without leaking a bit. Rather extraordinary, you'd call it. Am willing to make these gaskets for any of the projectionists.

Change Needed

In inserting the gaskets between the cover and the case, it will be found necessary to grind down the heads of the two screws that fit into the cover next to the gears to prevent the heads rubbing the gears when the framing lever comes into play. Outside of this there is nothing else for the projectionist to do but to put the gasket between the cover and the case and forget all about shellac and oil leakage, since the shellac cracks and the leaks follow.

Very truly yours,
MAURICE E. CLARK,
Grenada Opera House,
Grenada, Miss.

This suggestion is possibly worth while considering although the matter of reducing the screw heads raises the question of the practicability of the heavier gaskets.—Editor.

Dear Ed:

Your kind favor of the 6th at hand and in reply to same wish to state that I am leaving my present employment. I doubt very seriously whether I will go back to the projection room or not.

With reference to the slide changer. I am still working on same and as soon as I can get it perfected and a patent on it I will be very glad to send you a copy of the blueprint. I have spent considerable time and money on this and I want to try to get something out of it.

It might be of interest to you to know that I am to take charge of a theatre in Greenville, N. C., this being a much better position in every respect than the present one. If my operator there is not a member of the League, I will see that he joins.

Thanking you for your many kindnesses, and trusting that the League will continue its growth, and good work, I remain,

Very truly yours,
E. E. Rawl.

The bonding of the warehouse means that you may now permit your incoming film shipments to remain in bond until it is convenient for you to pay the duty and have them removed.

Report Corrected

In our issue of November 4, this department published an article to the effect that John Praggastis has let contract calling for the erection of a 650-seat theatre in Kelso, Wash., and that the house was to be equipped by B. F. Shearer, Inc. We have been advised that the latter part of this statement is incorrect in that the General Supply & Repair Company, Inc., of Portland, Ore., is to install Powers 6B projectors along with draperies, curtains, screens, interior decorations, etc.

so that a suitable transition in brightness is afforded in passing from the street through the entrance and lobby into the dimly lighted auditorium. The visual shocks that come with sudden changes of intensity will be practically eliminated if this principle is carefully applied. The eye thus becomes accustomed to the darkened surroundings gradually.

The accompanying diagram in Fig. 3 shows in a graphical way the small steps or differences in illumination value in various portions of the Merrill theatre in Milwaukee, Wis. It will be noted that the intensity varies from 8 ft. candles at the entrance to practically zero at the screen.

Lobby and Foyer

The foyer and lobby afford probably better than any other portion of the theatre an opportunity for working out novel and individual methods of lighting treatment. Attractive and impressive results can be obtained here without the use of glaring exposed lamps that so often create an atmosphere of garish cheapness. The intensity of light should be more subdued than for the entrance of the theatre as in Fig. 3, thus reducing the contrast between the bright street illumination and that of the dimly lighted auditorium. Many schemes have been adopted for lobby lighting. Hanging fixtures of metal, composition, glass or crystal, illumination from coves and cornices, lighting standards, portable lamps, wall brackets, etc. The lobby shown in Fig. 4, illustrates the use of special lighting standards. This lobby is 30 ft. by 50 ft.—has a ceiling 20 ft. high. Four 8 ft. standards light the entire space. Each is equipped with four 100-watt lamps burning in silvered indirect lighting reflectors.

When we consider that the wattage expenditure is only slightly more than one watt per square foot, this is a very effective and economical way to illuminate the lobby. The method eliminates glare and tends to bring out the decorative touches that have been carefully added to make the lobby attractive.

With much the same effect, but with the lighing accomplished in an entirely different manner, the lobby in Fig. 5 is given as an example or cove or cornice lighting. Cove lighting has been known for many years to be an ideal method, but only since the production of the high efficiency lamps have the many possibilities for illumination of interiors by this method become apparent. One of the pleasing features of the cove method is that it uniformly illuminates the ceiling and when properly planned no splashes of light or shadows are present to indicate the position of the individual lighting units in the cove. Cove lighting requires more careful planning than the ordinary lighting problem in order that the results be economical and pleasing.

RESTROOM AND LOUNGE.

Comfort is the essential feature to be kept in mind in the illumination of restrooms and lounges. The lighting should be of a subdued intensity. One of the usual methods consists in the employment of decorative units such as portable lamps and wall brackets that provide a tinted lighting effect.

A typical example of lounge lighting is shown in Fig. 6—the men's room in a theatre in Milwaukee. In this case a silk bowl fixture produces general illumination of a diffused character. The warmth of the colored silk bowl adds to the artistic value of the interior.

This article will be continued in the next (Dec. 2) issue of the NEWS, in which will be described the lighting of the remaining sections of the theatre that are not treated in this issue. (Editors Note.)

OUR printing machines have a capacity of 23,000 feet of film a day. But the printing of 15,000 feet is a good day's work for an operator in THE STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES. We could decrease operating expenses by running these machines to capacity, but our workmen could not handle negative with the care they do now. Our printing must be done with more than ordinary skill. Each foot of film must be the best possible to make from the negative. This same exactitude throughout our plant assures the superiority of Standard Prints.

THE foremost producers of the West know this. They use our service from the camera to the screen. The magnitude of our plant and the completeness of our equipment is their guarantee of the finest possible work without delay. Each consignment of film receives the individual attention of our laboratory experts. Only efficient co-ordination of all departments makes possible the excellence of Standard Prints in quantity production.

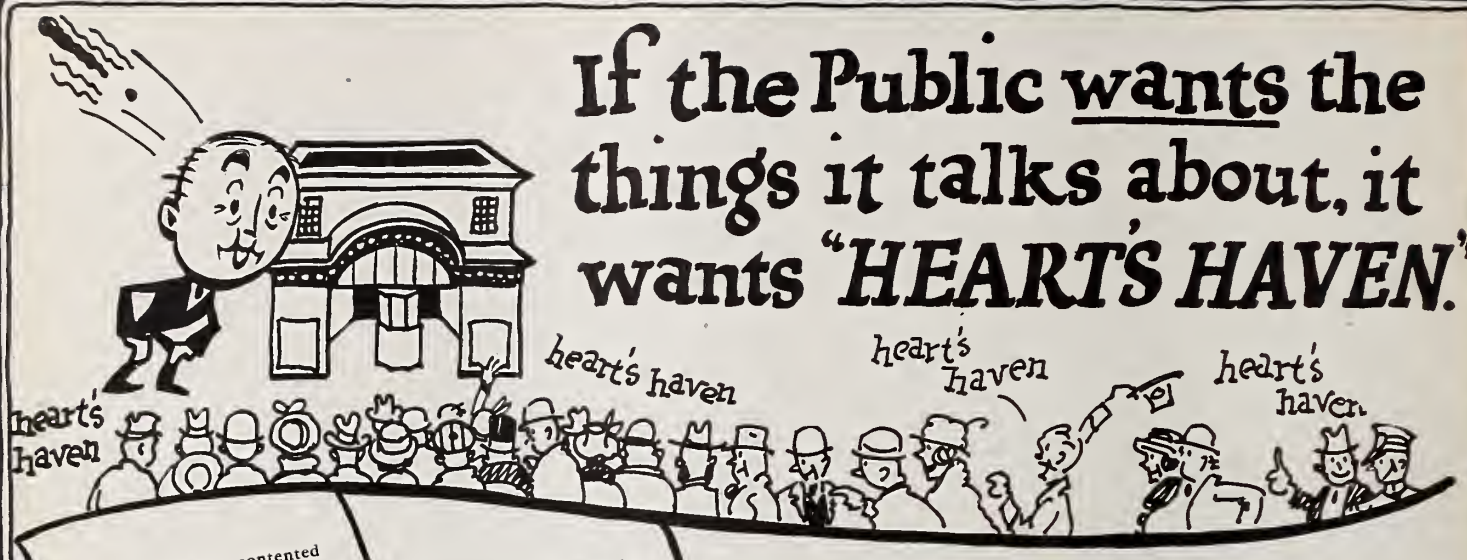
If the Public wants the things it talks about, it wants "HEART'S HAVEN."



"The subject contented himself with putting upon his bare neck a handkerchief, with the thought that he was going to die, and in this way killed himself. It is not the first time I have known a patient to persuade himself that he would die; so that after a determinate delay, on the foreseen date he did die."

London Coroner's Report on a "Mental Suicide"

"Though autosuggestion may pass, it is difficult to believe that psychologists will cease to push further into the dim and almost uncharted realm of the subconscious. If the subconscious holds, indeed, the possibility of death as well as the promise of life, something more than an immense hope has dawned upon the world."

New York Times

The one big topic of conversation the world over today is this:

Can my mind absolutely control the destinies of my body?

We read of a man in London who committed a suicide mentally.

We find that a book on the mental control of the body, written by a brilliant Frenchman, has sold 750,000 copies in the last three months.

In every newspaper in the country, column after column is devoted to the discussion of the mental control of bodily actions.

It is the one big topic of popular discussion on the tip of everyone's tongue; it is one of the most serious questions that has ever occupied the mind of the public.

Clara Louise Burnham wrote a book about it, called "Heart's Haven," which Benjamin B. Hampton and his associates turned into the biggest motion picture of its kind since "The Miracle Man."

Not a treatise on "isms" or "ologies," but a very human story of impelling interest.

If you ever had a chance to show a picture typical of "what the Public wants," it's right NOW; for if the public wants the things it talks about, it wants "Heart's Haven."

THIS is the first of a series of six advertisements to appear weekly in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, written by Ellis Parker Butler, world famous humorist and author of "Pigs is Pigs," telling America about a new screen play, "East is West." Mr. Butler accepted this commission only on condition that he be permitted to say exactly what he pleased on the subject.

Why shouldn't I tell the world about "East is West" if I want to?

Thousands and thousands of people have already laughed and wept over the adventures of little Ming Toy "99% American girl" and her athletic lover Billy Benson in the stage play "East is West." Everybody that saw Fay Bainter, as the first Ming Toy, being hustled down to the gorgeous but hideous Love Boat because her "father" thought too many daughters were a curse unless he could cash in on their beauty in the matrimonial slave market, will admit it was a great play. Since its first night on Broadway the play has had a two-year run at the Astor, played many consecutive weeks the sixth time it returned to San Francisco, and is still a success on the road. Nearly every American willing to pay two dollars or up for a seat has seen it, and it has made a fortune for its authors, Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer, and for Wm. Harris, Jr., its producer. And they deserve it for providing so much good fun to a world that needs all it can get. Of course, the Motion Picture people were quick to ask for the screen rights of such a hit but the authors and producers knew its value and let the movie men bid against bid for two long years before they cried "SOLD" to Constance Talmadge's Manager, Joseph M. Schenk.

Now, I haven't the least bit of diffidence in saying I am being paid for writing this series of articles, which will run for six weeks in The Saturday Evening Post. I don't think it will hurt my standing as an author. Magazines and newspapers pay authors to write about the stage and screen, and all I am asked to do is to tell the truth about "East is West" as I see it. Honestly, I think it is going to be fun to be able to tell some ten million people what I think about a motion picture play. So here goes—more about "East is West" next week.

The meeting of Ming Toy and Billy Benson

/hat does "East is West" mean?

When it comes to a matter of love and hate, good and evil, est is East, and East is West. And that's true. To prove it story takes an altogether delicious little China maid, who n't feel China," and puts her in danger of the hideous things can happen to a Chinese girl whose father sells her as a e. In the picture this little Ming Toy, who later boasts she 9% American-girl," is Constance Talmadge, and all through icture she seemed to me just about the most charming I have ever seen on the screen.

he story begins in China with little Ming Toy flashing most un-Chinese and thoroughly American bit of temper hoeshop because the shoe merchant dares hint that her e too large for beauty. By the time she has said her say her tongue and her paper umbrella the street before the looks as if China had just had a bad spell of riot and ebellion. This, naturally enough, attracts the attention Benson who happens to be "seeing China." Billy is an young American, son of the American Minister, and as oy has about forty-seven parcels to manage, as well as little sisters and her temper, Billy sends them all home haws" or whatever the things are called in China. That e meets Ming Toy and is all he sees of her just then, re in mysterious China and know some thrilling thing to happen. And it does.

The Famous Love-Boat Auction Scene in "East is West"

"She is Ming Toy—The Beauteous One—and her price is most reasonable, your Excellency."

The "Love-Boat" scene in this "East is West" motion picture is a flash of real drama, and for two reasons. The first is the eye reason. By the time the love-boat appears we have been enough of China to feel that we are actually there, but it is the mean China of cheap streets and small shops and one-horse solie-peasant farms. Then, suddenly, we are whisked down to us beautiful and gorgeous Chinese love-boat, as bright and owy as the gayest New York cabaret. That is a clever use scenic contrast.

But the scenic contrast would be paltry if the reason for it re not inevitable. By the time the love-boat appears we are ghtly interested in what is going to happen to the charming le Ming Toy (Constance Talmadge) and are worried about If Ming Toy were an ordinary Chinese girl, brought up to sider being sold at auction a possible fate, we might not care h, but Ming Toy "don't feel China" and does feel "99% erican-girl," and we do care. We hate like sin to see her -eyed wretch of a father dress her up for sale and drag her to the love-boat, which is a sort of all-night Chinese et with a slave auction annex. We hate the fat mandarin ooks her over as if she were mere live stock before he bids r, and we would like to give him a punch in the eye. So, e, the love-boat scene was inevitable. It had to be there a part of Ming Toy's life story. And, just as Wellington terloo prayed for "night or Blücher," we want to know uch more of this Ming Toy has to stand, and why that ur young American lad, Billy Benson, doesn't get busy. tell you more next week.)

"I speak only dignified American language; get me, Stev

Seeing this "East is West" motion picture has increased m interest in the screen just about 99%. By nature and professi I am a humorist and I have sometimes felt that no humor b pie-slinging humor could be put on the screen successfully. T "East is West" picture satisfies me that any humor can filmed. Given the right treatment, humor can be as laughable the screen as on the stage or in a book I see that now.

"East is West" is the story of an averted tragedy but it humor from start to finish. Not a pie is slung and yet laughs are innumerable! Ming Toy (Constance Talma causes many of these by the entirely legitimate means of t a charmingly innocent little Chinese maiden who pick astonishing slum manners under the impression that they a manners of "99% American-girl," and shows she is pro them—as when she greets Charlie Yong haughtily wi speak only dignified American language; get me, Steve?" Charlie Yong—a humorous character! While we are de him for his black heart we are laughing at him as a co Chinese fop, and saying: "I have seen a dozen just like This is art, and first class art, because when the athletic American Billy Benson comes to the rescue you have swing from laughing at a villain you hate to welcoming at whom you do not laugh. The humor in "East is arises from the situations and characters—and that should be.

To my notion the meanest thing a man can do is to g away the plot of a play. I never do it. I have not done i this series of "East is West" advertisements. All I have is that Ming Toy, the little "Chinese" maid who "don't China," meets an athletic young American (Billy Benson) is then hurried to a love-boat to be sold into matrim slavery. That happens in China and presently little Ming is in San Francisco. I have not said how she gets there, or But in San Francisco a new villain pops up—the 50-50 C man Charlie Yong, who is going to get Ming Toy if he l steal her and murder everyone else.

That does create a situation! Charlie Yong is the f corseted chop suey king of San Francisco, and he usual what he wants. I don't mind saying he is the most c mately conceited ass I ever ran across and that I felt extreme dislike to having him get Ming Toy. "She—Ming Toy—belong to Charlie Yong—" "Not if I know it," says Billy Benson

This is the last of the six advertisements I was to write about "East is West," and it has been good fun to talk to ten million people, writing what I pleased, and getting paid for it. I think I have done pretty well as an advertisement writer and I'm going to be disappointed if at least ten million do not go to see "East is West" because of these advertisements. My whole family will go—and we are seven—so there are only 9,999,993 to be accounted for.

And now for my grand finale and bow. Before I agreed to write these advertisements I went to see "East is West." If I had not thought it was a good picture I would not have agreed to write anything I did like the picture. I only remember one picture I liked better—and I wrote that one myself. "East is West" has drama, thrill, fun and pathos and some of the best acting ever photographed. Constance Talmadge as Ming Toy reveals shades of emotion—from broad fun to appealing pathos—such as she has never shown before. Her Ming Toy will be one of the best loved characters on the screen, or I miss my guess. If I am not mightily mistaken "East is West" is going to be a tremendous success. That's what I think. I wish every one of my 9,999,993 readers who see the picture could tell me whether they think as I think—the other seven will. What I think is that it is a delightful motion picture and I do not hesitate to urge you to see it at the first opportunity. You'll thank me.

And I thank you!

Go Slowly

AND now we have booking combines.

New York has the fever. Chicago is pretty well organized and so are several other key centers.

At this writing there is imminent a country-wide group of local exhibitor booking organizations.

And the outlook affords about as serious a problem as this industry has ever faced.

The movement was probably inevitable.

It is the result of producer-owned theatres for one thing; and for another it is the result of rentals shoved forward with very little consideration except to exact every last dollar the exhibitor would pay.

It is a back-fire to destroy another fire; and it has that excuse.

But the danger of it is tremendous.

Look out—lest the fire and the back-fire burn everything up between them except a very few stone citadels which in the end will own this industry up and down and fore and aft, body and soul—whatever remains of it.

The Associated Booking Corporation of New York recently states in reply to its critics, that its cause is a fair and just one; that it exists in behalf of the independent exhibitor—to protect him against first-run aggression and rental prices.

All of which is very well indeed. It is a statement of ideals.

But who is to run this and other such circuits—or still more importantly the national combine that will inevitably result from these local units?

Who will arrange the standards of picture values and theatre competition and to what ends?

Who will wield this very large power in a fashion less selfish and more wisely than other powers are today wielded in this industry—the very powers for instance which these booking combines are combatting.

Who are the idealists?

They must be men above personal ambitions—pressure-proof, politics-proof; men that have proven these more or less superhuman qualifications.

They must know that the motion picture can be made the slave of no men or set of men, or business group. It is the servant only of the public.

They must know that a business monopoly of the motion picture is a destructive impossibility.

They must know that no branch of this industry can thrive upon another's destruction; that the three big branches are virtually partners; that only their satisfactory inter-relations will encourage the production of pictures that the public will pay to see.

The safest measure of such qualifications is that a man shall have so large an investment in the business that he must observe its whole welfare—and gravely.

Beware of the man who has nothing to lose!

Gentlemen, this is a serious matter.

It isn't one for hot-headed action.

Go slowly—very slowly.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

WILL H. HAYS was unanimously and enthusiastically elected a member of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their regular luncheon last week at the Cafe Boulevard at the conclusion of an address which received prolonged applause. Mr. Hays was accompanied by Messrs. O'Neil and Bateson from his office. He was introduced by Robert Edgar Long. Victor Shapiro presided.

Mr. Hays launched his subject with a direct reference to the power of the printed word. When the censorship bill was up in the Massachusetts legislature, more than a year ago, a sensational picture advertisement appeared in the Boston papers. The picture itself was not at all objectionable but the advertisement was. It was this advertisement that threw the legislative votes in favor of censorship.

The advertising men in the motion picture business, Mr. Hays stated, were in a position of great responsibility. It is their word that tells the public about motion pictures. These messages to the public must be as clean as pictures must be clean; they must uphold the basic policy of the picture-making industry today, which is to "attain and maintain higher moral and artistic standards of production." They must, above all, tell the truth. Mr. Hays referred to the Massachusetts vote against censorship. The "No" votes on censorship exceeded by nearly 100,000 the "Yes" votes for the successful candidate for Governor.

In conclusion, he referred to the great power of the motion picture and its present opportunity to solve international problems and advance the progress of the world. He quoted some interesting figures showing the importance of the motion picture industry in California. Its product last year was worth $140,000,000 and the industry maintained an average weekly payroll of $500,000, whereas, the oil business, its nearest competitor, did a business of $103,000,000, with an average weekly payroll of $300,000.

THEDA BARA is going to make "The Easiest Way," the play by Eugene Walters, as her first starring attraction for Selznick. It was David Belasco who made the claim that the play is America's greatest contribution to the dramatic stage. Others of equal fame declare "The Great Divide" the greatest of them all. There are several authorities left who have gone on record as stating that the great American play has yet to be written. This controversial topic will naturally stir up some argument concerning the greatest photoplay. We make no individual choice—not with this quartette, "The Four Horsemen," "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," "The Miracle Man," and "The Birth of a Nation."

J. D. WILLIAMS left a week ago for Los Angeles, a sort of curtain-raiser trip to a two months' residence there in January and February. He will return from his first trip about the end of the month and open up his temporary offices in the Straus Building.

IT'S written right on the program of "Down to the Sea in Ships," Elmer Clifton's motion picture romance of New England's golden days of whaling, that it was made through the co-operation of an entire city—that city being New Bedford, Mass. It is a matter of consequence when the inhabitants of a town undertake such a measure. It is not only of great advertising value for the town, but establishes the fact to the outside world that it may have something to offer in the shape of historical lore and background.

This should prompt other cities to adopt the same idea. What about New York or rather Nieuw Amsterdam when it was settled by the Dutch? What about Hendrik Hudson's cruise up the majestic Hudson or when the snug little isle was bought from the Indians? There is rich background here for some enterprising producer. New Orleans, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Salt Lake City are other municipalities which could make rich and colorful backgrounds for romance and atmosphere.

Incidentally this "Down to the Sea in Ships" carries one of the most impressive titles that ever adorned a photoplay. There's a romantic quality about it which is highly appealing. We can think of very few pictures which have carried out the spirit of the title as well as this production.

THOSE exhibitors who would complain of hardships should see what Mr. Yung is up against down Texas way. His theatre is located in Sonora, which is seventy-two miles from a railroad. Yet in spite of this fact the house operates four days a week and receives film shipments regularly by parcel post. Which proves that compensation always has an outlet. With no railroad trains handy the customers must stay at home.

HAROLD LLOYD waved a cheerful farewell to Broadway last Sunday when he started back for Los Angeles to engage in another year of comedy production at the Roach studios. Harold believes in working hard and playing hard. But he never allows play to interfere with his work. He takes a vacation once a year, comes to New York to greet the boys and see what the theatres have to offer in the shape of legitimate attractions. But as much as the boys like to greet Harold, there's not one among them who would take him away from the studio where he must continue to uplift the screen with such pictures as "Grandma's Boy," and "A Sailor Made Man."

HERE'S one for the book, the best part about it being that it is a true story, but for the sake of saving humiliation, names are best omitted. A First National salesman out of Kansas City called on a live "tank town" exhibitor the other day. After arguing the drawing power of various first-run pictures, the subject drifted to "Oliver Twist."

"S-s-s-p-u-r-t," sprinkled he of the alfalfa metropolis; "never have tried it. I've stuck to Granger Twist for 'nigh onto thirty years."

But Kansas is a great state.

THE November issue of Exceptional Photoplays, published by the National Board of Review, lists "Nanook of the North" and "Shadows" as two pictures deserving honorable mention. Other attractions given briefer mention include "Nice People," "Oliver Twist," "Lorna Doone,"

"To Have and To Hold," "Trifling Women," "Timothy's Quest," "Blood and Sand," "Above All Law," and "Brawn of the North." Characterizations which are conspicuous with their excellence feature Lon Chaney's compelling study of the Chinaman in "Shadows," Will Rogers' quaint expression as Ichabod Crane in "The Headless Horseman," and Constance Binney's work in "A Bill of Divorcement."

AN interesting visitor at the News office this week was O. S. Cole, Vice President of France and Goulette, Inc., of Manila, P. I. Mr. Cole's firm runs the Lyric Film Exchange and the Lyric and Savoy theatres in Manila. He will contribute an article to Motion Picture News on picture conditions in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Cole entered the picture business in Manila in 1909 but he first took up with motion pictures in 1898, at which time he traveled through Central and South America with an Edison Kinetoscope and fifty feet of film.

We can't help remarking also that Mr. Cole says he books his pictures very largely through Motion Picture News.

"AFTER THE BALL." When referring to one of a season's festivities, the usual delineation of "a great success" offers as adequate description. Not so with regard to the Equity Annual Ball and Midnight Jollies of 1922, surpassing anything of its kind to date. Dancing, which continued long after break of the following day, was interrupted by sections of such entertainment as only Hassard Short can arrange, delivered by an assembly of Equity members, embracing the most favorably acclaimed talent of the screen and stage. In the Pageant, "The Women of Equity," led by Ethel Barrymore, followed by Florence Reed, Nazimova and Grace LaRue, were Laurette Taylor and several of the most popular women stars who carried the Equity Flag. "The Men of Equity" were led by John Emerson, President, and Frank Gillmore, and a half hundred actors, whose names in electric lights mean a great deal to the amusement loving public. At the conclusion of the second show, Rodolph Valentino and Winifred Hudnut Valentino won enormous applause, when the dance from "The Four Horsemen," primarily responsible for the star's initial popularity, was finished. Among other prominent film folk present were Kenneth Webb, Robert G. Vignola, Richard Stanton, Herbert Brenon, Thomas Meighan, Leatrice Joy, Corinne Barker, Marion Davies, Anita Loos, Bebe Daniels, Mary Carr, Martha Mansfield, Nita Naldi, Anita Stewart, Mary Anderson, Macey Harlam and hundreds more.

"DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in Robin Hood" is running so smoothly at the Lyric that Doug sees no reason to remain longer in New York. Before leaving the city the early part of next week, he will conclude arrangements for the leasing of theatres in London, Paris, Rome, Berlin and Vienna for the presentation of his big production. Accompanied by Mary Pickford, Doug will return to California by way of Mexico. Incidentally, we might add that he has decided to give the screen as his next subject the colorful character of the ancient pirates. He intends to make it as spectacular as "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

IT looks now as if the Massachusetts referendum on censorship, showing so clearly the will of the American public In the matter, were to mark the turn of the tide on the matter. The Boston Post, a few days ago, carried a story stating that the representatives of the Massachusetts Federated Churches and the State Committee on Motion Pictures had announced that they did not contemplate further action with reference to censorship of motion pictures, and that no action was likely at present, since opinion of the members was divided. Al Smith, governor-elect of New York, has repeatedly stated in interviews with the press that one of his first actions after taking office will be to start a move to repeal censorship.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week of a gigantic corporation, with a capitalization of five or six million dollars, to modernize China through the medium of motion pictures. It is said that James A. Thomas, for many years an executive for the British-American Tobacco Company in China, will be connected with the venture, as also will Frank V. Chamberlain, for five years with Famous Players in important capacities in connection with distribution.

DOUG, it now appears, isn't going to film "M'sieur Beaucaire" just yet, after all. Sets have been under construction for this picture for the past week, but now Doug has decided that to follow the story of Robin Hood with another romantic costume drama would be a mistake. At last reports, Fairbanks was looking for a suitable pirate story. This, it seems to us, is a good hunch. A good, swashbucking pirate yarn would give Fairbanks an outlet for all his talents and energies, yet provide a different sort of characterization and setting.

RUMORS concerning Von Stroheim's affiliation were set at rest this week by the definite announcement that he had been signed to direct elaborate productions for Goldwyn. We wonder, casually, whether these "elaborate productions" have anything to do with "Ben Hur," which is in the offing just now?

FRANK BACON is dead. It's lamentable that this very great actor did not live to reap the rewards of his success—where he could retire to the land of his birth, California, and take life easy after his long, arduous climb up the theatrical ladder to fame. Frank Bacon was a victim of circumstances during his youth and early manhood. Destiny wrote in the sky that his star would not ascend until he was long past the prime of life—at an age when most people have outlived their usefulness. He had experienced hardships and poverty. Yet he never gave up hope.

Then one day good fortune beckoned and Frank Bacon achieved his rightful place in the theatrical sun. His play, "Lightnin," which is said to be his own life, brought him fame at last.. Unusually successful on Broadway, it duplicated its phenomenal run in Chicago. Recently Frank Bacon retired from the cast. He died in harness, his last words being "I'm tired, I need a rest."

Statistics of the Motion Picture Industry

Third Installment of the Babson-Columbia-News Film Statistics Is Analyzed

By L. C. Moen.

THE first two articles of this series have covered the material gathered on theatres, admission prices and programs. One of the most important and significant parts of the questionnaire, that headed "Your Box-Office Results," follows.

The first question to be asked under this heading was: "Can you count on a good average business, regardless of the feature you are playing?"

No little interest attached to this, since it has long been a disputed point as to whether a theatre, or any great number of theatres, could build up a steady, week in and week out clientele, regardless of special attractions. This question was answered by practically every theatre manager filling in the questionnaire, and the tabulated result shows the following percentages:

|---|---|
| Not good unless feature is good | 76.02% |

Three out of four theatres, it will be seen, find that business falls off noticeably when the attraction is mediocre or poor, thus indicating strongly that the prosperity of the industry depends, first of all, upon good pictures.

Next, in order, was a closely related question: "Do you find that an attraction that draws extra large business hurts attendance on pictures immediately following?"

This has been the subject of more contention than has the first question, since it has a highly important bearing upon the ever present "super special" attraction, and its real desirabilty.

The tabulated answers, representing the judgment and experience of the theatre managers sending in questionnaires, are as follows:

|---|---|
| Hurts business following | 68.77% |
| Does not hurt business following | 31.23% |

Again, it will be seen a considerable majority of exhibitors agree that an unusual attraction has an effect upon business immediately following.

In considering these figures, of course, it must be borne in mind that a special attraction is usually exploited heavily, and immediately following it, advertising and exploitation usually fall temporarily below the normal level, and this may account for some of the depression.

Generally speaking, however, the axiom may be safely laid down that, in the majority of theatres, good pictures are vitally necessary to insure good business, but that business must be expected to fall a bit below normal following an attraction that draws unusually large receipts.

The third question under this head has also been the bone of frequent contention among those connected with motion pictures. This question was: "Taking the total box-office attraction as 100%, how would you divide it among the following? (Give your opinion)." Then followed space to fill in the estimated percentages on the feature, short subjects, music and vaudeville.

The results of this are as follows:

|---|---|
| Feature | 68% |
| Short subjects | 17% |
| Music | 15% |

As shown last week, only 5.99% of the theatres answering played vaudeville, so this was tabulated separately. Among these theatres, the foregoing figures were reduced proportionately, with vaudeville given the following rating:

| Vaudeville | 33% |

These percentages represent, in each case, an average of the percentages assigned by all of the managers. While such figures, of course, can only represent managerial judgment, and can never, perhaps, be a matter of definite knowledge, this represents, as far as is known, the first broad consensus of opinion ever obtained on this subject. It is a matter of opinion at best, and that of the theatre manager is most likely to be accurate.

Great economic importance attaches to the following question: "How does present business compare with: 1914? 1918? 1919? 1920? 1921?" Then followed space in which to check "Better," "Same" or "Worse."

The tabulated percentages are:

|---|---|
| Better than 1914 | 25.54% |
| Same as 1914 | 19.68% |
| [illegible] than 1914 | 54.78% |
| Beter than 1918 | 17.28% |
| Same as 1918 | 15.71% |
| Worse than 1918 | 67.01% |
| Better than 1919 | 14.25% |
| Same as 1919 | 10.74% |
| Worse than 1919 | 75.01% |
| Better than 1920 | 12.16% |
| Same as 1920 | 10.98% |
| Worse than 1920 | 76.86% |
| Better than 1921 | 11.21% |
| Same as 1921 | 17.26% |
| Worse than 1921 | 71.53% |

Practically three-fourths of the theatres, it will be noted, reported business as worse than either 1919, 1920 or 1921, while only about one-eighth report it better. These questions, however, were filled out a few months ago, and it is to be assumed that some improvement has come about since that time.

A fairly optimistic note was sounded in the replies to the following question: "What do you expect for the remainder of 1922?" on which the following replies were received:

|---|---|
| Better expected | 34.99% |
| Same expected | 50.30% |
| Worse expected | 14.71% |

More than a third, it is seen, anticipated improvement, one-half felt it would be about the same, and less than one-sixth looked for further decline.

The close relation between general prosperity and the prosperity of the motion picture industry was established in the answers to the next question: "Do you get a much larger attendance in years when there is full employment and business is good generally?" The sentiment on this is overwhelming, as seen in the following:

|---|---|
| Yes | 97.29% |
| No | 2.71% |

"What is your best season?" followed. This is not a matter regarding which there has been any great uncertainty, but the answers revealed a somewhat surprising diversity in this regard. In a considerable number of cases, managers checked more than one season, in which case the vote was split. The totals are as follows:

|---|---|
| Spring best | 20.16% |
| Summer best | 7.20% |
| Fall best | 48.29% |
| Winter best | 24.34% |

Following this, and closely allied to it, was the question: "What is your poorest season?" The results on this are:

|---|---|
| Spring poorest | 16.05% |
| Summer poorest | 61.09% |
| Fall poorest | 3.35% |
| Winter poorest | 19.51% |

Thus it will be seen that fall is the best season with the greatest number of theatres, with winter, spring and summer following, in order, and that summer is the poor in a large majority of cases, with winter, spring and fall following.

Also economic in nature was the next question: "How do most of your patrons get their money?" with spaces to fill in under agriculture, mining, livestock, manufacturing industries and miscellaneous.

The replies to this question reveal the following percentages among the theatres answering:

|---|---|
| Agriculture | 10.60% |
| Mining | 10.33% |
| Livestock | 12.63% |
| Manufacturing industries | 34.10% |
| Miscellaneous | 32.34% |

Manufacturing industries, it will be seen, are well in the lead, with agriculture, mining and livestock rather evenly divided.

The following question is of interest to almost everyone in the industry, presenting, as it does, the types of features which make the best box-office attractions. These, ranged in order of highest to lowest, are:

|---|---|
| Westerns | 18.16% |
| Feature comedies | 18.04% |
| Famous books and plays | 15.41% |
| Society | 15.06% |
| Northwoods | 14.62% |
| Light farce | 7.35% |
| Melodrama | 7.27% |
| Heavy drama | 3.07% |
| Costume | 1.02% |

Foreign pictures fared rather badly at the hands of those answering the questionnaire. On German made pictures, the results reported are:

|---|---|
| Good | 2.20% |
| Fair | 15.43% |
| Poor | 82.37% |

On French made films:

|---|---|
| Fair | 11.47% |
| Poor | 87.31% |

On Italian made films:

|---|---|
| Poor | 89.34% |

Next week the questions coming under the heading "Miscellaneous" will be taken up, concluding the presentation of the results of the exhibitor questionnaire. This will include exhibitors' views on whether film rentals are too high, whether they favor cheapening productions to lower rentals, what percentage of the gross goes for film rental, overhead, advertising, and others.

Late News Notes from the West Coast by Wire

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER is in Los Angeles.

Sid Grauman sells a one-half interest in Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian theatre to the West Coast Theatres company, according to an announcement by Sol Lesser. This makes seven in Hollywood and sixty in all.

George Bronson Howard committed suicide in a closet with gas early Monday. He left an unfinished series of detective stories which he had started for Universal.

Motion Picture Book Week Proves Success

Demand That Idea Be Made Annual Institution; Organizations Report on Results

MOTION PICTURE BOOK WEEK, observed in all sections of the country from November 12th to 18th, went over with a most satisfactory measure of success, judging from the reports of various film organizations that participated in the enterprise. One fact remains outstanding—the demand that Motion Picture Book Week be made an annual institution. The arguments advanced for its recurrence each week are that it would stimulate greater interest in the screen as a sister art of literature, would win new patrons among those classes still "unsold" on the motion-picture as a medium of high-class entertainment, and accomplish much towards silencing the screen's critics and offsetting procensorship propaganda. From the viewpoint of the box-office the value of a Motion Picture Week each year is obvious; stimulated interest among the confirmed picture fans and newly acquired patronage among the "non-comers" and occasional attendants means longer lines before the ticket-window.

As was explained in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of November 4th, Motion Picture Week grew out of the annual drive instituted by the leading publishers of the country and known as Children's Book Week. The object of this movement is to center nation-wide attention on the best available literature especially suitable for children and young people. The National Committee for Better Films, a body of workers affiliated with the National Board of Review, co-operating with representatives of the Children's Book Week Committee, selected a list of films based on the classics and popular fiction and suitable for exhibition before mixed audiences. This list was published in pamphlet form and circulated with the endorsement of the Better Films Committee as containing motion-pictures especially appropriate for exhibition during Children's Book Week. Tie-ups between the exhibitors and local booksellers, libraries, parent-teachers' associations, etc., were arranged. The school authorities were requested in letters broadcasted by the Committee to lend their personal assistance in bringing the Book Week showings to the attention of their young charges. How well the idea worked out is attested by word from the various organizations that took part in the campaign.

The offices of First National Pictures report that almost 300 additional bookings for pictures based on books of national reputation and literary merit were obtained as the result of plugging the National Book Drive in connection with civic and literary organizations to promote good reading.

Such pictures as "The Last of the Mohicans," "Kindred of the Dust," "Pilgrims of the Night," "Penrod," "Bob Hampton of Placer," "The River's End," "One Clear Call" and "All for a Woman," all of them based either on well known books or famous historical characters, shared in the renewed interest of National Book Week.

A noteworthy feature was the interest that centered around New York in "Kindred of the Dust," where the extra bookings alone mounted well into double figures.

The showing of 300 bookings is all the more remarkable in that, with one exception, the features that were especially sought because of this drive had been on the market for some time. Many of them were released more than a year ago.

Effective and Economical Mechanical Displays

WINDOW and lobby mechanical displays create interest and frequently bring about a desire to see the production to which they relate. They are not necessarily expensive. Proper contrivances of this sort can be made effective and economically. A number of these have been successfully used during March and September of this year. They have been explained and illustrated in various issues of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Refer to your NEWS file—your copy of THE BOOKING GUIDE will tell you where to locate them. You can adapt them for similar purposes on that feature you intend to run.

THE BOOKING GUIDE makes locating information of this sort easy.

This is one of the explanations as to why THE NEWS IS FILED THROUGHOUT THE FIELD.

The one exception is "Lorna Doone," which is only beginning to have its runs; but First National exchanges throughout the United States and Canada have reported a brisk demand for this feature due, to a certain extent, to the added interest aroused in the subject by exploiting its literary counterpart.

Paramount also reports most satisfactory results for the week. Eighteen Paramount pictures were in the list selected by the National Board of Review—"The Call of the North," "The Bonnie Brier Bush," "The Conquest of Canaan," "Cappy Ricks," "The Dictator," "Peter Ibbetson," "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," "The Great Impersonation," "Huckleberry Finn," "The Little Minister," "Male and Female," "The Man From Home," "Miss Lulu Bett," "Morals," "Moran of the Lady Letty," "Sentimental Tommy," "Tillie" and "Treasure Island."

Prints of these pictures, according to Famous Players, were pretty well cleaned out in several exchanges, with the result that many substitutions were made which proved highly satisfactory, such as "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Humoresque," "Conrad in Quest of His Youth" and "The Miracle Man." Coming at the period of the year when business always slows up a little, owing to natural reaction from the heavy rush attendant upon the opening of the fall season as well as distracting pre-holiday interests which tend to hold audiences out of the theaters, Book Week fits in most opportunely, in the opinion of Paramount branch and sales managers.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation reports a big demand for the three pictures based upon books for young folks which were selected and recommended by the National Board of Review for showing during Children's Book Week, November 12th to 18th. The three pictures selected were the current film, "Sherlock Holmes," based upon Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes stories and the stage version made by William Gillette; "Yellow Men and Gold," adapted from the adventure story by Gouverneur Morris; and "When Romance Rides," founded upon Zane Grey's western romance, "Wildfire."

"Yellow Men and Gold" and "When Romance Rides" were released late in the summer and had already been shown in many hundreds of theatres. There was a spurt in the bookings of them for Children's Book Week, however, due to their appearance on the National Board of Review's list of book-pictures suitable for children.

"Sherlock Holmes," being a current release and having already been heavily booked in first run houses for Children's Book Week, had an unusually good showing.

"Book Week," according to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, stimulated a demand for a greatly increased number of bookings not alone for the "Great American Authors" Series but for several other features distributed by Hodkinson that have been taken from well known books.

Exhibitors have taken advantage of the one-reel subject, "The Life of Washington Irving," one of the series of "Great American Authors," and have used this as an introduction to "Rip Van Winkle" and "The Headless Horseman," both of which are being booked by a great many exhibitors as typical of the work of the "Father of American Literature." Inasmuch as this one-reel gives a review of the life of Irving and also a picturization of some of his favorite characters, including that of Ichabod Crane and "Rip" himself, many exhibitors are taking advantage of this fact by using it in the form of a prologue or advance advertising for the two other Irving pictures of feature length.

It is also stated by the Hodkinson Corporation that exhibitors throughout the country are showing exceptional interest in some of the other subjects which have been emphasized during "National Book Week." Among the features booked are "Jane Eyre," "The Veiled Woman," "East Lynne," "A Certain Rich Man," "God's Crucible" and five of Zane Grey's most popular novels.

Exceptional business has been done by the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, operating in Wilmington, N. C., on "The Headless Horseman," which was presented in conjunction with "The Life of Washington Irving," produced by the Kineto Company. In this instance the schools were prevailed upon to help in putting this production over. It is understood that "The Headless Horseman" broke all records for Wilmington. The Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., likewise took advantage of the widespread publicity given to the National Book Week and ran "The Headless Horseman" to one of the largest weeks the Symphony has known.

Warner Brothers' pictures, "Rags to Riches," featuring Wesley Barry, and "Heroes of the Street," were recommended by the National Committee for Better Films as a desirable attraction to include young people generally. As a result exhibitors took advantage of the co-operation of book stores, libraries, women's clubs, parent-teacher associations, schools, etc., and profited by the attendance of thousands of children.

Valentino Objects to First Wife Using His Name

Rodolph Valentino objects to his divorced wife, Jean Acker, changing her name to Valentino. She has petitioned the court to that effect, and he has filed his objection. Valentino asserts that when he married his former wife she knew his true name was Rudolfo Guglielmi and that she is attempting the change so that she might advertise herself.

Paramount Forces Warmly Rec'd on Coast

Delegates Greeted by Los Angeles Mayor and Chambers of Commerce Leaders

ONE of the biggest receptions accorded the delegates to any convention ever held in Los Angeles marked the arrival in the West Coast metropolis Monday of the special train bearing the Eastern contingent for the Paramount sales convention, numbering some seventy-odd.

Mayor George E. Cryer, of Los Angeles, and delegations from both the Los Angeles and Hollywood chambers of commerce, whose efforts made possible the holding of the big meeting at the Western film capital, officially welcomed Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, S. R. Kent and the rest of the visitors.

At the train also were a large number of Paramount stars, directors and leading players. A blare of lively music from the Los Angeles American Legion band greeted the visitors as they stepped off the train and made their way to the waiting automobiles.

Over one hundred automobiles formed in line and, headed by the band, the visitors proceeded to the Paramount exchange where Messrs. Zukor, Lasky, Kent and Herman Wobber, West Coast district manager, reviewed the passing machines, which carried the delegates and scores of Southern California exhibitors who had gathered to welcome Mr. Zukor and his associates.

The business sessions of the convention started according to schedule on Tuesday morning at the Hotel Ambassador, with S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, presiding. On Tuesday evening the big social feature of the convention was held at the Lasky studio, when hundreds of actors and studio production executives joined in honoring the visitors at a banquet held in the prehistoric forest setting for Cecil B. DeMille's current production, "Adam's Rib."

Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the company, acted as toastmaster, and in opening the post-prandial formalities he expressed his recognition of the importance of this, the first, Pacific Coast meeting of the distribution department of the company.

"The thing that this convention augurs," said Mr. DeMille, "is a closer co-operation between the men who make pictures and those who sell them. And this co-operation will bring closer contact with the public, which is really the big goal of all of us. Our greatest duty is to serve the public with the highest grade of entertainment possible, and meetings such as this are certain to bring that duty closer to perfect fulfillment."

A splendid program followed the last of the speeches. It started with the Cecil DeMille gown revue. Louise Dresser rendered a number of songs. Snitz Edwards and Mervyn Leroy gave a splendid comedy salesman and exhibitor act. Following this came the Marcel Fashion Revue.

Mayor Cryer of Los Angeles gave the address of welcome. Charles Eyton welcomed the guests on behalf of the studio, Rob Wagner on behalf of the writers, Sam Wood on behalf of the directors, Theodore Roberts on behalf of the players, and Arch Reeves on behalf of the publicity department.

All of the speeches urged a closer bond between all branches, and especially distribution and production. A humorous sketch by the scenario department was one of the hits of the evening. It showed the difficulties encountered in preparing a script. Rob Wagner started reading the script, when fault was found by every department. Finally the scenario department has nothing left but the title, which is referred to the New York office. New York changed the title and sent the new title to the studio continuity writer assigned to prepare the script and given seven days to complete same.

Dancing closed the evening's entertainment

One of the principal announcements coming out of the convention was that Famous Players-Lasky will have thirty-nine features for the last six months of the current season. Titles, casts, directors and writers of these were to be announced by the closing day's session.

Two sessions daily was the schedule followed out by the convention, and in addition the delegates were kept busy with continuous entertainment when sessions were not in progress.

Sid Grauman entertained Wednesday evening at a theatre party. Cecil DeMille was host at his home in Laughlin Park Thursday; Friday was devoted to a tour of the Lasky studios, and the program was to be topped off with a banquet Friday night. The special is scheduled to leave Los Angeles Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.

In speaking of the convention S. R. Kent said:

"Holding the convention in California has proven beneficial and far more enthusiasm is being displayed than we anticipated. We will have some information to announce by the end of the week."

Adolph Zukor was the principal speaker at the opening session, and was given a tremendous ovation. Herman Weber and Jerome Beatty were in charge of the convention arrangements. Arch Reeves, supervising Los Angeles publicity, arranged with the Los Angeles Evening Express to issue a Paramount number Friday.

The Eastern delegation was given a great send-off at the Grand Central station in New York when the special train left Thursday afternoon. Shortly before five o'clock a big surprise was sprung when a band composed of members of the Rialto and Rivoli orchestras, followed by fifty of the two theatres' ushers in uniform, marched into the big concourse, where the departing delegates had gathered. As the party filed through the gates to the train shed a flood of arc lights was turned on and motion pictures of the entire party were taken. These pictures were shown the same night at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

A three-hour stop at Chicago enabled the delegation to visit Jones, Linick & Schaefer's new McVicker's theatre. The next day at Kansas City Mayor Frank Cromwell, heading a big delegation from the local chamber of commerce, met the train and officially extended an invitation to hold the next convention in Kansas City.

Censors Cause Only Fuss, Says Rabbi

RABBI NATHAN KRASS, of the Central Synagogue, New York City, speaking at Boston at a public Sunday afternoon forum, last Sunday created much amusement in view of the recent defeat of censorship, when he declared that he had censorship in New York, and that probably Boston had it too.

He declared that all censors were good for nothing but to make a great deal of fume, fuss, and worry, all because a picture here and there was not so virtuous perhaps as they would like to have it.

"Why," he demanded, "do people as a whole always leave the best things to the worst people?"

Then he launched into praise of the motion picture as one of the greatest of all possible mediums for advancement and education of the right sort, declaring that nothing in the world could so spread the knowledge that really counted in after life as could the screen.

Massachusetts Victory Forces Praised

Now that the smoke of battle has cleared up incident to the defeat of state censorship of the motion pictures in Massachusetts, it is well to look back a bit and see some of the forces which, by putting heart and soul into the fight, buried the "reformers" deep under 350,000 ballots marked "NO."

The great forces against censorship during the fight were the press of the state, daily and weekly; the citizens' committee, so ably led by Brigadier General Charles H. Cole, Charles C. Pettijohn, of the Hays organization, and last, but not least, the exchange men.

Ten days before election all of the exchange managers in Boston met at the Hotel Copley Plaza, the presiding genius being Fred Murphy, president of the Film Board of Trade. George J. Schafer was in charge of the work of organization for the fight. There were several important results of that meeting.

Each man was assigned to several theatres, and was held personally responsible that those theatres were covered properly at every performance. It was the duty of each to speak against the censor in every theatre assigned to him, and well they did it.

Election day was a great day for the exchange men, and well repaid the efforts that they had expended. Throughout the ten days there were 215 men on the job continuously, but on that memorable November 7 more than 3,000 took the field from "Film Row."

Perfecting Plans for "Better Motion Picture Week"

Plans for the observation of Better Motion Picture Week during the week of December 4th to 9th are going forward rapidly, according to word from the offices of the National Motion Picture League in New York. A feature of the program is the parade in which floats advertising those pictures endorsed by the League will take part. A children's matinee is also to be held in conjunction with the parade. Announcement is made that names of entries for the parade must be on file on or before Thursday, December 7th. National Motion Picture League headquarters are located at 1819, Room 1612, Broadway.

First National Executives Give Thanks

Thanksgiving Messages Express Satisfaction with Past and Confidence in Future

WHAT of Thanksgiving for motion pictures in 1922?

Glancing back for one year, before partaking of turkey, cranberry sauce and trimmings, have motion picture producers, stars and exhibitors cause for rejoicing on Thanksgiving Day?

The past has written its own story. Is the future encouraging?

Here are the Thanksgiving messages from First National officials:

R. A. Rowland, General Manager of First National: "We will eat our turkey this year with the knowledge that better times are here; better times are coming. Conditions are on the steady upgrade. We should view the matter that way and work with that conviction, rather than in a sort of childish faith that there is going to be a prosperity miracle. While this year finds us on the steady upgrade, next year will find us planted firmly at the top."

H. O. Schwalbe, Chairman of the Executive Committee and Secretary-Treasurer of First National: "Thanksgiving Day, 1922, finds the industry working toward the accomplishment of better things—a fact which means a bigger development along all lines."

Robert Lieber, President Associated First National Pictures, Inc.: "The motion picture industry should be thankful this year because some of the greatest pictures in the history of the industry are being produced; because people are demanding the best in the way of production, and in seeing their demands fulfilled are becoming strong friends, as well as patrons of the screen. We are entering an era in pictures this Thanksgiving in which there is a better understanding between all elements in the industry—the era of co-operation."

From the original franchise holders came these messages:

Sol Lesser, Los Angeles: "We have much to be thankful for this Thanksgiving, but probably one of the greatest things, in picture history, that we have to be glad about is that little Jackie Coogan has given the world a truly great cinema masterpiece in Charles Dickens' 'Oliver Twist.' It is picture productions such as this classic that the world needs more of and that the world will be thankful to obtain at all times."

Tom H. Boland, Oklahoma City: "Our industry has not only withstood the shock of post-war depression, but has so improved in every good way as to be an inspiration to others. We should be grateful Thanksgiving Day for the high standards toward which our ambitions impel us and the prospect for increasingly satisfying reception of our efforts by the public."

Col. Fred Levy, Louisville: "Evidence everywhere proves that the American people are recognizing motion pictures as the safest and greatest recreational diversion of the ages; they are likewise thankful for the genuine good the industry is doing educationally and morally. I for one am happy to be engaged in this wonderful business, and this Thanksgiving season pledge anew my best energies in rendering the screen an even greater service to the public."

Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.: "We are thankful, as we look back upon the year that is gone, for the period of psychological and financial depression through which the industry has passed. Thankful because all the torments of the spirit and the flesh that have been encountered have been successfully withstood and conditions weathered which a few years ago would have proved overwhelmingly disastrous. We are thankful for the optimism, the faith and the realization of the potentialities, the integrity and the value of the motion picture as a permanent fixture of American life which this experience has inspired for the future. Our opportunities are limitless."

A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Iowa: "On this Thanksgiving Day of 1922 the motion picture industry has every reason to be truly grateful because we are standing firmly upon the foundation of the public's faith in us. We have suffered much—our industry has weathered the storm of ridicule and scandal and bitter depression—but upon this Thanksgiving Day we can see the sun shining. We have been weighed in the balance and the public has not found us wanting."

John H. Kunsky, Detroit, Mich.: "Thanksgiving Day, 1922, is of special significance to the entire motion picture world. We are recovering from a period of great business depression and pessimism. Therefore let us resolve to offer thanks with heartfelt gratefulness as we emerge once again into the sunlight of prosperity and peace."

Harry T. Nolan, Denver: "We in motion pictures should be thankful for a glorious past and a splendid future. Our industry is just getting started—and I say that after having worked for fifteen years in it. Let us give thanks for being workers in a great field, and let us seek constantly to make that field more fertile, from an artistic as well as box office point of view."

Moe Mark, New York City: "I give thanks that the Mark Strand theatres are holding their own and upholding the standards of the industry by showing only the best pictures."

Jacob Fabian, Paterson, N. J.: "Let's do some personal picture making this year. Let's draw a mental picture of folks who need help on Thanksgiving and then let's help them."

"Let us be thankful that there's a dandy list of First National attractions ahead of us," writes Sam Tammen, manager of the United States theatre, Hoboken, N. J. "We're bound to break more records."

And Arthur B. Smith, proprietor of the Fenwick theatre, Salem, N. J., wrote:

"We can be thankful that two major strikes have been settled; that the wheels of industry are turning with a constantly accelerating speed; that a tendency toward a better understanding exists between the three branches within the industry and that a better feeling is manifested by the general public from without. We can be proud of the past and hopeful for the future."

Goldwyn Signs June Mathis as Editorial Director

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION has closed negotiations with June Mathis, one of the most famous and successful scenario writers in the industry, to head its editorial department. Her title will be Editorial Director.

Miss Mathis recently returned from New York to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California, and will at once assume the duties of her new office. She took with her to the Coast the almost completed continuity for Goldwyn's forthcoming production of Gen. Lew Wallace's novel of the Christ, "Ben Hur," on which she has been working for three months in close association with A. L. Erlanger, producer of the stage version of the novel and with the Goldwyn executives.

Among the recent photoplays which Miss Mathis has prepared for filming are "The Four Horsemen," "Blood and Sand," "The Conquering Power," and "Hearts are Trumps." Other pictures for which she wrote the continuity are "Out of the Fog," "Lady Frederick," "The Right of Way," "Lombardi, Ltd.," "Eye for Eye," and many others.

Philadelphia Picture Men Honor Edgar Moss

Edgar Moss, recently appointed by Goldwyn as resident manager of its Philadelphia branch exchange, was honored by the motion picture men of that city with a testimonial dinner in honor of his appointment.

The affair was held at the Majestic Hotel, Broad and Girard avenues, on Tuesday night, November 21, and more than a hundred of Mr. Moss's friends in the film industry were present.

The souvenir program prepared for the occasion contained a portrait of Mr. Moss on the front cover, a poem written in his honor, the menu and the names of those participating.

Mr. Moss assumed the position of resident manager for Goldwyn's Philadelphia office about a month ago when Felix Mendellsohn was made supervisor of the territory embraced in the Philadelphia, Washington and Pittsburgh exchanges. He is thoroughly familiar with the film situation in Philadelphia, having had various motion picture affiliations there—notably as sales manager for Famous Players-Lasky.

Hodkinson to Distribute Film Guild Pictures

Four Film Guild pictures starring Glenn Hunter will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation during the coming season, according to an announcement by Fred Waller, Jr., production manager of the Film Guild. The series will be "Second Fiddle," by Frank Tuttle, with Mary Astor playing opposite Glenn Hunter; "The Lap of Luxury," by Townsend Martin and Frank Tuttle, with Martha Mansfield playing opposite Mr. Hunter; Percy MacKaye's witchcraft romance of Puritan Salem, "The Scarecrow," with the scenario by James Ashmore Creelman and Frank Tuttle; and a fourth picture, the story for which is now under consideration.

The first two of the series have been completed, and the third, "The Scarecrow," is now in the process of adaptation by Mr. Creelman and Mr. Tuttle.

George Bronson Howard Mourned

Noted Playright and Scenarist Is Found Dead from Gas in Hollywood Apartment

GEORGE BRONSON HOWARD, noted American novelist, war correspondent and playwright, and for the past six months a member of the scenario staff at Universal City, was found dead from gas in his apartment, in Hollywood, Tuesday morning. The police believe he took his own life, although there was no indication that he premeditated suicide. He had been suffering, however, from wounds received in the British Ambulance Service during the World War.

Howard had a varied and adventurous career. Born in Howard County, Md., in 1884, he first became known as a war correspondent for the London Daily Chronicle in the Russo-Japanese War. After that war, he returned to the United States and worked for various American newspapers. Later he turned to fiction, and at times was on the writing staff of such magazines as Sunset, Popular, Smart Set, and the Green Book. He served as dramatic critic for the New York Morning Telegraph.

Among his best known stories are "Norroy, Diplomatic Agent," "Scars on the Southern Seas," "Meeresgold," "An Enemy to Society," "The Red Light of Mars," "Slaves of the Lamp," "Birds of Prey," "The Black Book," and "Master Francois Villon of Paris."

He also turned to playwriting, and numbered the following among his productions: "The Only Law," "Snobs," "Springtime," "The Passing Show of 1922," "Broadway to Paris," "A Night in Subterranea," and "Easy Money."

His best known photoplay is "Come Through," the picture which made a star of Herbert Rawlinson, and which was again made by Universal last summer under the title, "Don't Shoot." He also wrote the story for "The Spy," "Queen of the Sea," "Sheltered Daughters," and "Perils of the Secret Service," a screen adaptation of his "Yorke Norroy" stories.

Universal officials in New York were greatly shocked at the report of George Bronson Howard's death. As one of the four big internationally known writers who formed Universal's corps of scenario experts, he was held in the highest esteem by the Universal organization.

Howard rejoined the Universal scenario staff less than six months ago. Since then he has prepared scenarios for several important Universal productions, including "The Radio King," and "Around the World in 18 Days," two of Universal's new style chapter plays.

Howard recently prepared a new series of eight "Yorke Norroy" stories. The original Yorke Norroy stories won him great fame as a novelist, the first of the series appearing many years ago in the Popular Magazine. When Howard put them into screen form for Universal in 1917, they proved to be a big success. The new series, now in production at Universal City, marks the end of Yorke Norroy—in fiction as in fact.

Los Angeles Banker Lauds Statistics in News

AMONG many expressions of interest which have come into the office following the publication in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of the first of the series of articles on fundamental statistics of the motion picture industry, by L. C. Moen, the letter reproduced below has been one of the most gratifying to the NEWS. Written by John E. Barber, vice-president of the First National Bank of Los Angeles, it expresses the views of a man known from coast to coast as an authority on motion picture finance. The letter follows:

Mr. William A. Johnston, Editor,
Motion Picture News,
New York City.
Dear Mr. Johnston:

You cannot imagine with what interest I am reading the statistics of the motion picture industry that your energy and effort have made possible. I tried to get these essential facts at one time myself and spent a lot of time and some money trying to cover the situation, but did not get any real co-operation from the producers even in this city where they cry aloud for financial assistance.

The figures that you are going to print will make it possible to lend money to motion picture interests with much greater intelligence and safety than has ever been possible up to this time, and I congratulate you upon the response from the industry which you caused.

Yours very truly,
JOHN E. BARBER.

The third article of this series appears this week.

A. B. C. in Statement Defines Its Purpose

Founded Solely to Get First-Run Attractions by Collective Booking Power

IN a statement issued this week to the press the Associated Booking Corporation, an organization of independent theatre-owners operating in the Metropolitan district, sets forth its purposes. The A. B. C. declares that it exists purely for the purpose of assisting independent exhibitors to secure a share of first-run attractions, utilizing its collective buying power as the means of attaining its objective. The statement follows in full:

"The Associated Booking Corporation wishes to place itself squarely on record as an organization founded solely and absolutely for the purpose of assisting the independent exhibitors to secure a share of the first-run attractions that are being offered which up to the present time have been denied them, regardless of price, regardless of their situation or regardless of their investments, solely because of the collective buying power of the circuits.

"It is because of this collective buying power that the A. B. C. is being formed, and it is because of the fairness and justice of its cause that it is being encouraged by the producers who have the interest of the industry at heart.

"And it is only those producers whose interests are closely allied with the various circuits whose power is in danger of being lessened that are giving the A. B. C. the unfair fight that it expected and is getting under the very thin cloak of not selling combinations. Unfortunately those circuits, being also producers, can, through their organizations, influence some of the producers to do their bidding. But in the eyes of the industry, the A. B. C. knows that there is absolutely no difference between this body of independent exhibitors and the organizations of stockholders and partnership theatres controlled by the present circuits.

"The A. B. C. wishes to state that it is not asking any favors of any exhibitor circuits, of any producers who do not wish to deal with them, that they do not wish to control prices or to drive anyone out of business, but they are simply a protective association of New York exhibitors who are tired of being told that they cannot get first-run pictures because they are too small individually and that they will not get them if they are too big collectively.

"And, furthermore, the very definite statement made by the executive head of the largest of the circuits at a recent meeting of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce to the effect that he was now engaged in picking out certain theatres over which he had previously asked indiscriminate protection but whom he was now prepared to allow a day and date run, makes it clear to the members of the A. B. C. that their co-operation is most necessary and that this direct result proves the benefit of this association to the independent exhibitor."

Better Films Movement Spreads in South

THE Better Films Movement continues to spread over the South accord to an announcement made last week by H. T. Jones of Southern Enterprises, who states that organizations will soon be in operation in Greensboro and Raleigh, N. C. Mrs. T. W. Bickett has accepted the temporary chairmanship of the Greensboro organization and in Raleigh W. C. A. Hammell is the moving spirit.

Dr. Chester C. Marshall of Connecticut who spoke in Atlanta last winter in favor of the movement will make a tour of Durham, Ashville, Winston-Salem, Charlotte, Raleigh and Greensboro sometime this month in the interest of this movement, making public speeches and also talking with ministers and others.

Goldwyn announces that it has transferred B. B. Reingold, manager of its Omaha branch exchange, to its Chicago office as resident manager. Before being put in charge of the Omaha exchange Reingold was sales manager for Goldwyn in Chicago.

Roy Churchill has been appointed resident manager of the Omaha exchange, succeeding Reingold. He was connected with the Dallas, Texas, and Salt Lake City exchanges several years ago. For the past four years he has been connected with the Kansas City office of F. B. O.

Hays' Presence Asked to Combat Reformers

Reformers of the state of Missouri have their program ready for the new Missouri Legislature, which convenes in Jefferson City in January. This program includes censorship of motion pictures, Sunday closing bills and other pet measures.

Under the circumstances Fred Wehrenberg, vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis, believes Will Hays' presence in St. Louis is desirable at this time with the inauguration of "Go to the Movies Week," which was arranged to combat the reformers. Hays will be asked to be one of the speakers at the Melbourne roof banquet, which will be one of the features of the week.

Chicago Orpheum Theatre to be Rebuilt

JONES, LINICK AND SCHAEFER have decided that the success of their new McVickers Theatre in Chicago warrants the belief that the loop district needs another first run picture house. They have therefore decided to rebuild their Orpheum Theatre on State street, starting January 1.

According to Ralph T. Kettering, general representative of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, this firm has negotiated a new lease on the Orpheum, which gives them control of the house for fifty years. He states that the Orpheum will not be closed for any length of time, as arrangements have been made for swinging the scaffolds and completing most of the interior decorations after the performances have closed at night.

The seating capacity of the remodeled house will be eight hundred, which is believed sufficient for long run pictures.

Goldwyn Dance Promises to Be Big Success

The Goldwyn dance, scheduled for Friday night, December 15, on the Roof Garden of the Astor Hotel, New York, promises to be one of the biggest film events of the season. Goldwyn employees are putting all kinds of energy and pep into the preparations for the big event and they intend to make it something long to be remembered.

More than a thousand tickets for the dance have already been disposed of and the ticket committee is continuing its efforts without letup.

Scores of noted screen stars who expect to be in New York at the time of the dance have indicated their intention to attend.

With the proceeds of the dance, the Goldwyn employees will organize a Welfare Club. A dance, under its auspices, will likely hereafter be an annual affair.

Technicolor Picture for Rialto Showing

The world premier of Technicolor's first film presentation, "Toll of the Sea" will take place at the Rialto theatre, New York, on Sunday, November 26. Technicolor is presenting the picture through Metro Corporation as its first film in natural colors.

The process was invented and perfected by Professor Daniel C. Comstock of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a graduate of scientific institutions in Berlin, Basle, Zurich and the Cavendish Laboratories in England. Also by Professor Herbert D. Kalmus, noted engineer and scientist. They have spent seven years working on this process.

"The Toll of the Sea" is a five-reel production whose story was written by Frances Marion, based on an old Chinese legend.

Futility of Censorship Is Shown by Vote

W. D. McGuire, executive secretary of the National Board of Review addressed the members of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce last Tuesday, upon the subject of censorship, and showed them two films upon which they voted.

One picture was a Snub Pollard comedy called "Strictly Modern." The written ballot, following the showing of this comedy was: Passed without change, 258; passed subject to elimination, 37; condemned in toto, 68.

A Pathe news weekly having bathing beauty scenes which were eliminated in New York, and coal strike scenes which were eliminated by New York, Kansas, Pennsylvania, but were passed by Ohio and Maryland, was voted with 230 favoring it; 130 passing it with eliminations, and 3 condemning it in full.

In view of the fact that the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce had a committee working on the motion picture censorship problem last spring, with its majority favoring censorship, the outcome of the ballot conducted last Tuesday by McGuire shows more than ever the futility and unreasonableness of censorship.

Novelty Features Billed for T. O. C. C. Dance

"In the Spotlight" is the title of the special attraction which will be presented at the theatre owners' supper-dance at Hotel Astor on December 3rd.

It is understood that this will be a novelty sensation in which all the stars will appear either singly or in pairs, and one of Broadway's most prominent comedians will introduce these stars in his own inimitable way.

In the box party with Governor-elect Alfred E. Smith, who will be the guest of honor, will be Senator-elect Royal S. Copeland and James Walker, and other prominent public personalities.

Every producing or distributing company will be represented in the horseshoe of boxes, and each company will decorate its own box in its own individual manner.

At the T. O. C. C. headquarters further advices state that all previous records for advance ticket sales have already been eclipsed.

Universal Head in Chile Thought Quake Victim

DAVID SOUHAMI, Universal sales manager in Chile, cannot be located, and officials in New York fear he is a victim of the earthquake. Meager reports filtering up from Chile, through Universal's South American headquarters in Buenos Aires indicate that the Chilean manager last was reported in Vallenar, the Chilean city now in ruins. He had gone to that place to establish a branch office.

Upon his arrival in New York Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, took far reaching steps to locate the missing exchange head and to look after the welfare of Universal employes in the stricken country. Through James V. Bryson, Universal export manager, instructions have gone to Monroe Isen, South American district manager for Universal, located in the Argentine, to spare no effort in behalf of the Chilean situation.

Isen's instructions include the undertaking of general relief and welfare work in addition to looking after the affairs of the score or more of Universal employes in Chile.

Goldwyn Signs Eric Von Stroheim

Will Direct Productions of Elaborate Proportions and Act in Some of Them

GOLDWYNN PICTURES CORPORATION announces that it has signed a long term contract with Erich von Stroheim to direct for it productions of great magnitude. The director will also act important roles in some of his pictures.

Mr. Von Stroheim holds a unique position in the screen world in that, although he is recognized as one of the greatest of directors, he has handled the megaphone on only three pictures—"The Devil's Pass Key," "Blind Husbands" and "Foolish Wives." He wrote the two latter and starred in them.

Von Stroheim's life has been as dramatic and colorful as the plots which he has transferred to the screen. He was born in Austria of aristocratic parents, and educated at the military academy. He became a first lieutenant and served through the trouble which resulted in the annexation of Bosnia and Herzgovinia. He has since taken out naturalization papers and become an American citizen, and is very proud of the fact.

When misfortune overtook his family in 1909 he came to America. He had broken so completely with old world ties that on his arrival in New York he would not make use of the letters of introduction to influential citizens which had been given him. His first job was as a package wrapper at $7 a week. He says he worked at everything except waiting on tables and tending bar. At one time he was a life guard at Lake Tahoe and at another a riding master at Pasadena. He was also a deputy sheriff and a forest ranger.

A rather insignificant fact in the young officer's renunciation of his blood ties was that three days after his arrival in New York he enlisted in Squadron C, First Cavalry, New York National Guard. Between numerous and varied jobs he wrote and acted in a vaudeville sketch. Then motion pictures beckoned and he went to Los Angeles in 1914, working as an extra when he could find a job.

Von Stroheim finally got a job as assistant director to John Emerson and had his first big opportunity in playing German and Austrian officers. After the United States entered the war, his vivid characterizations of German officers in "Hearts of the World" and "The Heart of Humanity" drew the hatred of the aroused nation to them. ELITE Productions have been organized at Los Angeles by H. H. Harrison, W. J. Paterson and W. H. Mitchell to make a series of 14 pictures to be distributed by George H. Gallaghan, New York, through Associated First National. The first production, "The Man From Outside," by Frederick Reelfi, jr., who will direct, is to star Frank Mayo, with Miriam Cooper, Mitchell Lewis, Stuart Holmes and Josef Swickard. Harry Fowler and Joe Walker will be cameramen. The company left this week for Shaver Lake in the Sierra Nevada mountains, one hundred miles northeast of Fresno. Interiors will be made at Universal City. Each of the 14 pictures will have an individual all-star cast. Milton Sills, has been engaged for one and House Peters for another.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Young Rajah—

Not as good as previous Valentino pictures, but drew a fine response. (Middle West).

A great disappointment. The picture shows the frailties of the book from which it is taken, without any compensations. Valentino does the best he can with such an improbable and unsatisfactory plot. Valentino as star, drew capacity houses. (Middle West).

Jammed them in at every show, but folks not so enthusiastic over the quality of the story. (East).

The Siren Call—

The attendance held up good all during the week with this one. (Middle West).

To Have and to Hold—

Wonderful picture which did a very good business. (Middle West).

Strong romantic drama with fine cast. Played to good business. Middle West).

The Face in the Fog—

Business could have been better, but we won't kick as picture had strong talent and ought to be good drawing card. (West).

The Man Who Saw Tomorrow—

Fair picture and business very good. Extra business partly due to added attraction. (East).

A captivating romantic drama that pleased patrons immensely. Very good attendance. (Middle West).

Pen and ink art ad on "Broadway Rose," used by the Liberty theatre, Kansas City

Not as well liked as other pictures with Thomas Meighan; star's popularity responsible for good business. (West).

The Impossible Mrs. Bellew—

Went over big and patrons pleased. (West).

When Knighthood Was in Flower—

Holding on here in longest run this theatre ever played. (West).

Fifth week and still going strong. (West).

Can play a return on this and pack 'em. (Middle West).

The Old Homestead—

Good picture. Business for first week good, but way off on second. (East).

FIRST NATIONAL

East Is West—

Played to big houses for a week's run. (Middle West).

Brawn of the North—

Strongheart again proves himself a great actor in this interesting north country picture. Plenty of interest and thrills make this box office attraction. Big business. (Middle West).

Liked by patrons but not the drawing card that "The Silent Call" was. (Middle West).

Business was very good. Those who had seen "The Silent Call" were all set to see this one and it was talked about. (Middle West).

The Rosary—

A tremendous appeal to this one. Played to capacity during run. Such pictures help the industry. (Middle West).

Skin Deep—

Good picture, but business off. (East).

The Song of Life—

Not heavy enough to attract much business. Receipts up to average, however. (East).

The Sea Lion—

A good type of picture for a change and my patrons liked it. (West).

Smudge—

Seats at a premium every night, but credit for this should go to Jimmy Hussey, the comedian, who also appeared. (East).

UNIVERSAL

Another Man's Shoes—

Played to satisfactory business and seemed to please patrons. (West).

Human Hearts—

Our audiences liked this very much. The picture is strong, consistent and well acted. (Middle West).

Broad Daylight—

Very good picture. Interesting throughout. Business better than it has been for several weeks. (Middle West).

Under Two Flags—

A very fine picture, which attracted only fair business due to stiff competition. (East).

FOX

For High Stakes—

Mix is a big favorite at this house and box office smiled. (East.)

My Friend, the Devil—

Excited some curiosity but not enough to bring them all week. The picture was taken off the middle of the week. (Middle West.)

Who Are My Parents—

Some think this is a masterpiece. Some think it rot. On the whole, the subject is getting threadbare and public interest in this problem has waned. Did only fair business. (Middle West.)

Could not give this one much. Not a box office attraction. (West.)

Tom Mix in Arabia—

Tom Mix and his horse "Tony" are happy combination and should be reflected in the box office. Popular with my patrons. (Middle West.)

Honor First—

Picture and business both bad. (East.)

Just Tony—

A horse who is a star, this time. Unusual. People came back the second time to see this picture. Did good business all week. (Middle West.)

METRO

Trifling Women—

A real box office attraction. It has action, heart interest, good acting, splendid direction and beautiful sets. We are holding it over a second week. (Middle West.)

Hate—

Fits well into most any program. Well received here. (Middle West.)

Broadway Rose—

Fair picture and business good. Star popular here. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Golden Dreams—

Mediocre picture and business only fair. (East.)

The Sin Flood—

Nothing but favorable comment. A different kind of a film. Excellent patronage. (Middle West.)

Sherlock Holmes—

Barrymore does splendidly. A real entertainment. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

One Week of Love—

A very good picture. Stood them up every night in the week with business picking up every day except Friday. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Slim Shoulders—

AMERICAN RELEASING

The Trail of the Axe—

Satisfactory. Did good business and pleased patrons. (West.)

WARNER BROTHERS

Rags to Riches—

Did good business in spite of rain and blustery weather. Seemed to give general satisfaction. It was a long time since a Wesley Barry picture had been around and time seemed ripe for one. (Middle West.)

Fair picture. Went well. (East.)

One of the best drawing cards in several weeks. Did a lively week's business. (Middle West.)

Only an average picture, but a good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Man Who Played God—

We may be "'way out west" but we appreciate actors like George Arliss. Good business. (West.)

A Tailor-Made Man—

Box office receipts with this one came up to expectations as Ray is very popular here. (Middle West.)

Tess of the Storm Country—

Of course we packed 'em in. What else with such a picture and Mary Pickford? (West.)

Let them come like this. We can get the money when the picture has an appeal such as "Tess." Pickford well liked. Business capacity. (West.)

AL LICHTMAN

Rich Men's Wives—

Better than the average picture, average box office value. (Middle West.)

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Around the Trade

CHICAGO members of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners met Monday, at the call of John Silha, A. Sapperstein and L. Siegel, Daylight Savings Committee, to consider ways and means of combatting the change in time, which has cost motion picture theatre owners of Chicago hundreds of thousands of dollars in the aggregate and individuals, as high as one thousand dollars a week. The interest in the new movement was shown by the large number of members who attended the meeting and the enthusiasm displayed. By unanimous vote it was decided to co-operate with the Standard Time League, now in process of formation, in the movement to abolish the daylight saving ordinance altogether, or in any event, secure modification of it which will curtail the period of daylight saving materially. The Standard Time League, it is understood, will have the powerful backing of the stock yard workers, mail carriers, teachers, Water Street commission men and others on whom daylight saving works a hardship, as well as the Catholic clergy, who are seriously inconvenienced by daylight saving time. The time is believed opportune for a strong campaign to bring about a return to use of standard time in the Summer, as public sentiment is swinging away from the daylight saving idea in the Chicago district and can be crystalized into active opposition by an organization such as planned, which will have the hearty co-operation of the motion picture theatres of Chicago. Previous to 1922 the daylight saving became effective on the last Sunday in March and was continued until the last Sunday in October, but this year the period of daylight saving was shortened, so that it started on the last Sunday in April and extended to September 24th. This was somewhat of benefit, but it is the desire of those interested in the league, to abolish daylight saving altogether if possible.

Exchange men and theatre men alike, have their ear to the ground these days in an attempt to gather further information in regard to the booking corporation, which is reported in process of formation in Chicago. It is understood that thirty-five theatre owners, representing fifty-three theatres, have already pledged themselves to become members of this organization, and that it will begin to function at an early date. A man known along film row as an exchange manager, is said to be in line for the job of booker for the combined houses.

Glen Reynolds, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, called the second of the zone or regional meetings for Galesburg on Wednesday of this week, the first of the get-together dinners having been held at Ottawa two weeks ago and proving a very successful event. Office Manager William Sweeney went to Galesburg on Monday to arrange for the meeting and work up interest among exhibitors of that district. A strong delegation of I. M. P. T. O. state officials was to attend, several motoring down from Chicago.

---

Edward Trinz, formerly manager of the Covent Garden, one of the Lubliner & Trinz houses, has purchased the Elite Theatre, a high-class six hundred seat house at Waukegan, from Carl Mueller. Mr. Trinz states that he will remodel and redecorate the Elite at once, making it one of the most attractive houses in the north shore cities, and will conduct it as a high-class motion picture theatre showing big features. He plans an aggressive publicity, advertising and exploitation campaign and has arranged with Al Dezel, of Master Advertisers to take charge of this work.

Among the Exchanges

CARL HARTHILL, who shares with I. Lesserman, of Universal, the title of oldest exchange manager in point of continuous service on film row, is now operating his own exchange, Harthill Pictures, which will specialize in releasing big features and short subjects. His offices are located at 732 S. Wabash Avenue. The first release will be "Saved By Radio," the thrilling Russell Productions' feature, starring Jacqueline Logan and with an unusually fine cast. Mr. Harthill is very well satisfied with the way exhibitors are receiving his product and has already booked "Saved By Radio" into many of the largest Chicago theatres.

Tom Gilliam, the veteran First National salesman, has been transferred to the publicity department of the Chicago exchange, where he becomes assistant to Tom Lazarus, popular exploitation expert. Bill Brimmer will hereafter cover the north side Chicago territory, which previously had been taken care of by Mr. Gilliam.

---

George B. West, of Norca Pictures, Inc., was in Chicago this week, arranging for the establishment of an exchange on franchise basis for his company. He has already completed arrangements for representation in New York, Detroit, Washington, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Buffalo, and after completing his work in Chicago will visit the important western key cities.

---

Sales Managers Bond and Sears, of Associated First National, are justly proud of the record their sales force is making in the national salesmen's contest. As the big event draws to a close J. M. Howland seems firmly established, not only in the first place for the mid-west District, but in the national contest, and two others of the midwest leaders are also in the first six on the general list. They are Jacob M. Jacobs and William C. Cook.

---

Dan Roche, publicity director of Paramount's Chicago office and Publicist Nealand, of Goldwyn, were in South Bend this week. Mr. Roche exploiting "The Old Homestead," which opened at the Orpheum Sunday, and Mr. Nealand, "Remembrance," which was the Blackstone feature. Good natured rivalry was the result and the two exploitation experts put over campaigns which made things sizzle around this bustling Indiana city.

---

Recent additions to Goldwyn's sales staff include Al J. Ziegler, who has been connected with the firm of Rubens & Finklestein, Minneapolis, who will cover Wisconsin territory; and W. S. Altland, formerly with Fox, who will cover Illinois territory.

---

Creswell Smith, of United Artists, is doing a lot of traveling these days and as a result of his observations in key centers like Cincinnati, Cleveland, St. Louis, and Columbus, is an optimist on the business prospect. Big pictures and interesting pictures are largely responsible for the improvement among theatre attendance noted everywhere, according to Mr. Smith.

---

Betty Blythe, beautiful star of "How Women Love," is in Chicago this week, making personal appearances at the Windsor and Crystal Theatres in conjunction with the showing of her feature, "How Women Love." Clyde Elliott, distributor of the Blythe pictures in this territory, arranged the appearances.

---

Ben Reingold has been promoted from manager of Goldwyn's Omaha exchange, to manager of the Chicago exchange. Mr. Reingold is well known in this territory as, before going to Omaha, he was sales manager at the local exchange. S. Shurman, who has been sales manager at the Goldwyn Pictures Chicago exchange, for some time past, has been promoted to manager of Goldwyn's Milwaukee exchange, and left this week to take up his new duties. Mr. Shurman will be welcomed back to the Wisconsin territory, where he made hundreds of friends among exhibitors when he was stationed in Milwaukee before. Rube Leventhal, who has been booker at the Chicago office, will go to Milwaukee with Mr. Shurman, in the capacity of assistant manager.

---

A midnight luncheon review was held at the Randolph Theatre Thursday night with officials of Chicago's Universal exchange as hosts. On the program was a presentation of "All Night," featuring Rodolph Valentino and Carmel Meyers; Reginald Denny in the "New Leather Pushers," and episodes from William Desmond's new serial, "Around The World in Eighteen Days." These midnight showings have become popular and bring out a big crowd of actors and actresses of the speaking stage and a surprising number of exhibitors.

"Wink and Win" Contest Wins "East Is West" Space

Paterson, N. J.—Taking a cue from Constance Talmadge's wink, as shown on some of the paper on "East is West," a really unusual contest was staged by the Regent theatre and the Paterson News.

Seventy-three winkers, bold or blushing, had their picture reproduced in the News with the result that the Regent was tied up with 417 inches of free publicity space during the first six days that the contest was on. The same winkers were screened at the Regent theater where audiences cast their votes. Inasmuch as ballots were cast at the theatre, it had a definite business building value.

The idea started with a determination to find the prettiest winker in Paterson; and the News sponsored the contest. For seven days it carried a first page caption: "Wink and Win" and every day a front page story and photographs. Every day its motor truck, bearing its photographers, toured the streets with signs announcing its search for "Paterson's Prettiest Winkers" announcing at the same time that the champion winker of the world was Constance Talmadge who was appearing in "East is West" at the Regent.

Voting was done on ballots provided by the News and deposited in a box placed in the theatre lobby. The stipulations arranged that all voting had to be done during the run of "East is West." The special "Winkers" reel was exposed Saturday, delivered Sunday afternoon, assembled Sunday night and shown for the first time at Monday's matinee.

"Knighthood" Tied Up with November Silk Sale

DETROIT, Mich.—Manager Wixon of the Adams theatre, where "When Knighthood Was In Flower" has begun a run, has arranged a tie-up with the J. L. Hudson Co., the largest department store in the city, that is attracting a lot of attention, especially from the feminine sex.

The November Silk Sale of the store is an annual event noted for its excellent bargains. The gown worn by Marion Davies as "Princess Mary" in the wedding with old King Louis, is mounted on a pretty model, standing in front of an effective background of a period chair placed before a yellow brocade hanging. Around are arranged the luxurious brocades which are on sale.

Women's League Meeting Offers "Hail the Woman" Tie-Up

EMPORIA, Kans.—Harry A. McClure, manager of the Strand theatre, took advantage of a meeting of Women's Equal Rights league to play "Hail the Woman" and not only obtained an endorsement but also a double truck co-operative ad in the Emporia "Daily Gazette."

Even had the merchants wished to withhold their co-operation they couldn't have refused. On such a subject, where so many women representing a large buying power were in the city, they had to come in on the tie-up. The exhibitor chose his time wisely and benefited by this foresight.

"Man Who Saw Tomorrow" Gets Apt Feature Stories

CUMBERLAND, Md.—Proof that newspapers will give space to picture publicity, provided a real story is involved, was given recently in a campaign for "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," at the Strand theatre.

Leslie F. Whelan, Paramount Exploiteer, drafted seven stories under the general title of "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," in which he gave sketches of the careers of some of the greatest visionaries of the age; John Augustus Roebling, inventor of the cable bridge; Edison, Alexander Graham Bell, Sigmund Freud, Einstein, and others.

The stories were signed by Thomas Meighan, star of "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" and run with the title as a caption. One was published each day for a week.

Theatre Holds Style Show on Store's Anniversary

Indianapolis, Ind.—An idea that could, on occasion, be adapted by many theatres, was employed recently by the Circle theatre, when it tied up with the L. S. Ayres & Company's department store for a fashion show on the 50th anniversary of the store, called "Yesterday and Today."

Miss Florence Kinnaird, Circle soloist, sang "The Last Rose of Summer," dressed in a quaint, old-fashioned gown suitable to the period of the song. This was followed by a scene at a country club, where the models rested after tennis or golf, exercised several prize-winning dogs or mounted thoroughbred horses for a canter.

The gathering for a dance at the country club gave opportunity for display of evening wraps, while in the next scene the dance was portrayed, the models dressed for the evening.

Front built on "The Old Homestead" by Manager J. F. Heinlein of the Central Square theatre, Waltham, Mass., complete in every detail, including a latticed bay window, vine covered porch, white paint and green shutters

Atmospheric lobby, complete in every detail, arranged by John B. Carroll, manager of the Imperial theatre, Asheville, N. C., on "The Old Homestead"

Dog Owners Are Appealed to on "Just Dogs"

Chicago, Ill.—Manager McCurdy of the Randolph theatre capitalized on the fact that the cast of "Just Dogs" is composed entirely of dogs, through an appropriate mailing card.

McCurdy had postcards printed showing a billboard and a row of dogs in front of it reading a notice roughly chalked up. Over the billboard there was a sign, "The Dogtown Poster Co.," and the notice read as follows:

"Folks—We are putting on a show, a picture all by ourselves. We call it 'JUST DOGS.' Nobody in it but just us dogs. All comedy. Funny dogs—Villain Dogs—Sweet Young Thing Dogs—Oh, Yes! and a monkey. 'JUST DOGS,' an all dog cast."

Several weeks previous to the showing were spent in getting the names of all the Chicago dog owners. Nearly 40,000 of these cards were mailed to them.

Window tie-up with music store, obtained by the Regent theatre, Pittsburg, on "Lorna Doone"

Indian Chief Whoops Things Up for "Buffalo Bill"

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Manager Rapp of the Montauk theatre, assisted by Jack Staub, Universal exploiteer, staged an effective piece of exploitation for the opening of "In the Days of Buffalo Bill."

The theatre obtained the services of Chief John Whitehorse, a full-blooded Cherokee Indian, as a lobby and ballyhoo man. The chief put on his full war regalia, mounted a pinto pony and gave Brooklyn a taste of frontier days, including the famed war-hoops. In the lobby the redskin did the war and other dances of his tribe to the accompaniment of a series of yells that took the breath of the Brooklyn youngsters crowded in front of the theatre.

Kindly Act Prizes Offered on "Man Who Played God"

New York, N. Y.—The management of the Keith-Proctor-Moss houses, in and around Greater New York, has offered prizes aggregating $50 at each theatre for kindly acts toward some unfortunate fellow being taking place within one mile of the theatre, and reported during the engagement of "The Man Who Played God."

The report of the kindly or charitable act seen is to be mailed or delivered to the theatre, accompanied by a seat check dated during the run of the picture. The incident must be genuine, and the best of them will be posted in the theatre lobby. Winners will be announced one week after the end of the engagement, with a first prize of $25, second, $15, and third, $10. Seventeen theatres are included in the offer.

Employees Wear Western Togs For "The Fighting Streak"

Beaumont, Texas.—The atmosphere of the picture was carried out throughout the entire house when Manager Tom Clemmons of the Tivoli theatre played "The Fighting Streak" recently.

The entire front of the theatre was boxed in with beaver board, leaving an opening in the center for a door or entrance. This beaver board front was painted with original ideas about the picture and flashy colors were used.

The ushers and house employes wore large guns, corresponding to the one used by Tom Mix in the picture. Tacked on this beaver board front were three large sombreros; also on display was plenty of cowboy regalia, including lassos, large guns, cartridge holders and cowboy trousers.

Front of the Luna theatre, Marion, Ind., on "The Storm," with forest effects

"Sherlock Holmes" Ballyhoo on Street Gets Interest

Denver, Col.—Managing Director T. E. Talbot of the Colorado theatre, aided by Richard Dorman, Goldwynner, put over an exploitation stunt on "Sherlock Holmes" that blocked traffic.

It started but two days in advance of the initial showing with a story in the Denver Times built around a telegram sent from New York by Sherlock Holmes to Capt. Washington Rinker, chief of the Denver detectives. The telegram read: "Discovered Denver clue to New Brunswick murder mystery. Am coming to investigate. Cooperation of your department is solicited." The head over the story, which appeared in the Friday issue of the Times, read, "Sherlock, the Sleuth, Heading for Denver."

On the following day a man dressed as Sherlock Holmes, ancient cap and checked suit included, made his appearance upon the streets of Denver. He was equipped with an extraordinarily big reading glass, tape measure, etc. The man would carefully examine door knobs cigar stubs, footprints wherever one was visible in the dust, and other objects, scrutinizing them carefully through the reading glass, measuring them with the tape line and making notations in a pocket note book. Wherever the man appeared a crowd quickly gathered and traffic was obstructed throughout the day on Saturday. The stunt was so effective that Manager Talbot repeated it on the following Monday when the photoplay was on view.

"Ghost Breaker" Wanted to Sleep in Cemetery

OMAHA, Neb.—Appropriate use of an old favorite was made to good advantage by Harry Watts of the Strand theatre and John E. Kennebeck, Paramount exploiteer, on "The Ghost Breaker."

Through the Omaha Bee, Mr. Watts offered $25 to anybody who would sleep for one night in the graveyard.

Nobody did, but Omaha thought they did. The next day, the Bee came through with a great front-page yarn telling the experiences of the "ghost-breaker" with due reference to guns, ammunition, chains, and the Strand theatre.

Cowboys from Rodeo Ballyhoo "Fairbanks in Robin Hood"

NEW YORK, N. Y.—A sensational street ballyhoo on "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" was arranged for the Lyric theatre through a tie-up with the management of the Madison Square Garden rodeo.

Garbed in their colorful western regalia and mounted on their cow ponies some hundred champion riders "yip yipped" their way up Fifth Avenue headed by an escort of mounted police and a half dozen automobiles bearing advertising banners and carrying the cowboys who were injured at the Garden during the week.

At the Lyric theatre, forty-second street and Broadway was transformed into a western street when the buckeroos hitched their ponies up to a hitching rail which had been erected for the occasion.

Men Over Sixty Admitted Free to "Remembrance"

BUTTE, Mont.—Free admission of all men sixty or more years of age was a feature of the exploitation campaign on "Remembrance" when that picture showed at the Ansonia theatre.

On a certain day ads in the newspaper and stories announced that all men past sixty who applied at the box office would be admitted free. The newspapers were generous in their space on this, and scores of old men who seldom visit the theatres accepted. Many brought members of their families with them. Manager Merle Davis and Goldwynner Frank H. Burns engineered the stunt.

Mr. Davis also arranged for a Boy Scout parade. They attended a matinee showing of the film in a body and the newspapers carried stories on that.

The daily newspaper, the Butte Miner, was tied up on a contest. Five dollars as first prize, with other prizes of tickets, were offered for the best essays on "Butte as it was ten years ago."

Navy Signalmen Issue Warnings on "The Storm"

Hackensack, N. J.—The management of the Eureka theatre, with the aid of Jack Staub, Universal exploiteer, used two Navy signalmen to issue a "storm warning" in connection with the exploitation of "The Storm."

The two signalmen were obtained through the New York Navy Yard, and were provided with standard wig-wag signal flags. One man was used on top of the theatre and the other on the opposite side of the street. They wig-wagged for twenty minutes, exchanging messages concerning "The Storm," then handed out dodgers warning the populace about the coming "storm."

They also repeated this wig-wag stunt at important street intersections in Hackensack during the busiest hours.

Lighthouse built in lobby of the Majestic theatre, Memphis, Tenn., on "Rose o' the Sea" by Manager H. B. Clarke. The light in the tower was made to oscillate by being attached to a large electric fan. The windows were covered with oiled tissue paper

Manager E. J. Bauman of the Plaza theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., arranged this elaborate lobby display on "The Iron Trail" recently

Men Tagged with Carnations as "Remembrance" Stunt

San Francisco, Cal.—It was Fathers' Tag Day in San Francisco when "Remembrance" showed at the California theatre.

The manager of the theatre, assisted by Goldwynner W. A. Burke, bought 3,000 carnations and roses from local florists at a cost of half a cent a piece, sent out the 20 girl ushers of the California theatre, in uniform, in Market street and they placed a flower in the buttonhole of every man who passed.

Attached to each flower was a small tag, about 1½ by 2½ inches. On one side of the card was printed "Fathers' Week at the California Theatre. Beginning Saturday, October 7th." On the reverse side was printed, "'Remembrance,' a story of Father—the best old scout in the world. Written and directed by Rupert Hughes." The flowers were all worn and the cards were all read.

Simultaneously, all of the prominent florists and street vendors of flowers displayed window cards calling atention to the fact that the week was father's remembrance week and that the proper thing to do was to wear a flower.

The manager of the Princess theatre, Seattle, used this arrangement of cut-outs on the marquee for "One Clear Call"

Kiwanis Club Announcement Is "Manslaughter" Ad

SUNBURY, Pa.—Printing 300 announcements of the weekly meeting of the Kiwanis club, which also contained advertising for "Manslaughter" and tied up with the local "Drive Carefully" campaign, got Manager Jess Blanchard of the Strand theatre on the good side of the club.

Eli M. Orowitz, Paramount exploiteer, who co-operated with Mr. Blanchard, inserted the following line at the end of the letter:

"Stationery furnished by the Strand. You might think this is getting away with murder, but it's 'Manslaughter.'"

Red Mill Built on Marquee for "Moulin Rouge"

New York, N. Y.—The management of the Cameo theatre has constructed an unusual marquee display on "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" for its showing at that house.

On top of the marquee, over the entrance, there has been erected a replica of the tower of the renowned rendezvous of Parisian night life, The Moulin Rouge—the Red Mill. The whole is brilliantly illuminated, of course, in red, and as the wheel revolves the illumination revolves also. It is an effective sight and compels attention.

An enormous scenery transfer truck was converted into a float onto which another replica of the Moulin Rouge tower was erected and this, too, was electrically illuminated in red. In addition, the float was made to resemble the magnificent throne of Rosalie Anjou, who, in the picture, is chosen Queen of the Moulin Rouge, and a girl was employed to wear royal robes and sit in state on this throne. At the other end of the float another girl and a man were made up as underworld characters of Montmartre—an Apache and his lady-love. In another corner, an artist with palette and brush labored studiously over a painting, while over them perched the hunched black cat to complete the scene.

Colleges Aid Book Week Use of "Lorna Doone" Film

Oxford, Ohio—Personal interviews with faculty members of the educational institutions in Oxford proved of great assistance to Manager E. A. Keene of the Oxford theatre in putting over "Lorna Doone."

In Oxford are located three large colleges, including Miami University and Western College for Women. The student population is almost as large as the citizen population of the town. On booking the feature Keene made a personal visit to the dean of the university and presented his case in the following light:

"Lorna Doone," being a faithful adaptation of a literary classic, deserved the favor of the educators. Mr. Keene felt that it was his duty to call attention of the teachers to the fact that he was making a special effort to present this picture during National Book Week and that the educators would appreciate his informing them of his plans. He had arranged a special matinee to show the picture to members of the faculties of the various educational institutions before the regular showings. If, on seeing "Lorna Doone" the teachers found it of educational value, they might wish to recommend it to their students.

This same invitation was presented to the faculties of the other colleges and to the high school of the town.

Advertising was barred from the opening of the new Vanderbilt stadium at Nashville, Tenn., but police co-operation on "In the Name of the Law" at the Knickerbocker got this banner in

Appropriate display of medieval armor, shields, and the like, above the marquee of Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., for "When Knighthood Was In Flower"

"Old Homestead Week" Features Numerous Events

Scottsbluff, Nebr.—Manager Billy Ostenberg of the Orpheum theatre and Exploiteer Rick Ricketson put over a comprehensive campaign on "The Old Homestead" recently.

Ricketson sold Mayor Deutsch on an appeal for the town to return to the moral code and standards of "the old Homestead." The idea "took" immediately.

Mayor Deutsch immediately issued this proclamation:

"This is an age of Homes, and any effort made to strengthen and brighten the home must add to the happiness and prosperity of the people. More happy homes means less viciousness and more law-abiding people. The Old Homestead, be it a dugout or a siddy, was a happy home, and I trust that this 'home week' we may bend our efforts toward developing more happy homes. Make your home happy and the world will be brighter for us all."

This went on the front page of the local daily along with statements by leading clergymen and other members of the "up-lift" to the effect that the delightful freshness of the old age had degenerated into brassy jazz.

The American Legion got out its membership in khaki and staged a parade Saturday morning in which was a float with a model old homestead built on it.

That night the American Legion held an Old Homestead Barn Dance with several hundred tripping the heavy but fantastic toe. The next day, the Sunday before the opening, every minister in town spoke of "The Old Homestead," its joys, its sorrows, its tribulations, but always of its cleanliness.

Girls in Armor Used to Aid "Connecticut Yankee"

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—Frank Newman, manager of the Strand theatre, attracted a great deal of attention during the playing of "A Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," when he employed three young ladies in suits of armor to parade the business streets in an automobile.

One young lady carried a banner on which was written "A Connecticut Yankee," another on which was printed "Strand" and the third was at the wheel. On the front was a sign, three by three feet advertising the play.

"Fatal Marriage" Is Exploited Through Essay Contest

Seattle, Wash.—In conjunction with the Seattle Star, evening daily, Manager Joseph Muller, of the Palace Hip theatre of this city, recently put over a clever newspaper contest stunt for his showing of "The Fatal Marriage."

The contest consisted of articles to be sent in to the contest editor on the subject of "My Greatest Moment." The contest was limited to women, and articles were not to exceed 200 words. The winning letter was to receive a cash prize of $20. The second prize was $10 in cash, and supplementary prizes of merchandise and theatre tickets were offered.

The contest was suggested by the plot of the photoplay, according to the paper. The idea was kept going for a period of about two or three weeks before the showing began, and ended the week of the local exhibition. Much comment, especially among women, and among men readers of the articles, which were published in the paper, helped to put the picture over.

Manager Muller also used the first decorated lobby display that has been seen at the Palace Hip in a year or more, and this also attracted attention to the picture.

Hearts Strung Along Street on "Human Hearts" Showing

Bellingham, Wash.—The main street of Bellingham was turned into an arcade of huge red hearts a few weeks ago by Manager Fred Walton of the American theatre for part of his exploitation on "Human Hearts."

By pointing out to them the strength and human element involved in the picture, Manager Walton secured the co-operation of all merchants for several blocks within each side of his theatre, and proceeded to make the street a single mass of red.

Wires were strung from each telephone pole down the length of the street on both sides, and thousands of red cardboard hearts, about a foot in size, bearing the words, "'Human Hearts'—American theatre," were tied onto the wire as close as possible so that they would move in the wind. Wires were then strung from each length-wise wire across the sidewalks to the store windows, and more hearts hung on these.

A person turning into the main street would walk into an arcade of bright red, which would lead them to the theatre lobby. At the lobby the wires turned in to the box office, and the string of hearts extended from the box office to the entrance of the theatre. The lobby was decorated with cut-outs and stills all in the shape of huge hearts.

The general appearance of the street was merely that of a long valley of red hearts, which led from each end of the main street directly to the entrance, via the box office, and which could not fail to attract attention from the most calloused show shopper.

The Rivoli theatre, Portland, used this unique display sign on "The Masquerader." The background was black, and the parts appearing white in the cut were transparent red paper, with lights in back shining through

"The Jilt"

Universal—4491 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

THE theme of this picture, that of a girl who mistakes pity and hero-worship for love, only to discover her real lover later, is almost universal (no pun intended) in its appeal. It is a situation which has arisen countless times, particularly in the period immediately following the war, and will arise countless times again.

The variety of solutions to this tangle is infinite, and hence we feel a keen interest in seeing what way out the heroine of "The Jilt" will find.

In one sense, the thread of the story here is rather slender for a five-reel picture, but in another, the suspense and conflict are so developed and maintained that the majority of audiences will probably find it entirely satisfying from that angle.

The story is one which depended for its interest and appeal upon the players chosen for the leading roles, and their ability, and the casting department has done admirably in this regard. Marguerite De La Motte, one of the most promising of the screen's younger actresses, gives a pleasing portrayal of the young girl who must choose between telling her blind fiance that she does not love him and losing her real love. Miss De La Motte photographs well here, and is given an opportunity to wear a variety of gowns and negligees. Emotionally, her characterization seems to ring true.

Opposite her, in the somewhat thankless role of the blind fiance, at the opening of the picture, is Matt Moore, who begins as apparently the hero, and ends as the villain of the piece. He handles the role to good advantage.

The always pleasing Ralph Graves appears as the third corner of the triangle, which he does capably, although he is called upon to do little save appear at the close with his head bandaged for a final close-up with Miss De La Motte.

Taken as a whole, this seems to be a good audience picture of its type, and should offer satisfactory possibilities for the theatres for which it has been made.

The Cast

Rose Trenton.....Marguerite De La Motte
Sandy Sanderson.....Ralph Graves
George Prothero.....Matt Moore
His secretary.....Ben Hewlett
Rose's father.....Harry De Vere
Rose's mother.....Eleanor Hancock

By R. Ramsey. Scenario by Arthur Statter. Directed by Irving Cummings. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Girl inspired by sympathy for blind war hero, gives him her affection. Later she meets another youth who arouses her love. Consequently she jilts the soldier. The latter goes to Europe. The girl desiring to make things comfortable for him writes to an eye specialist in Paris hoping that his sight may be restored. When her lover takes a trip with the soldier the latter attacks him. His sight has been restored. The lucky youth bobs up eventually and happiness comes to the girl.

Production Highlights—The admirable work of Marguerite De La Motte. Satisfying action and suspense. The conflict between the two lovers.

Exploitation Angles—This suggests a teaser campaign which could stimulate interest about the selection of a husband—on how to be sure of your sweetheart, etc. Would advise capitalizing the title and playing up the fact that Ralph Graves and Matt Moore assist Miss De La Motte.

Drawing Power—Good audience picture for second class downtown houses and throughout neighborhood houses.

"When the Desert Calls"

American Releasing—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

"WHEN the Desert Calls" is another "sheik" picture with a well known cast of stage and screen players, lots of atmosphere and a plot that while lacking in logic has a new twist.

Violet Hemming, a recognized artist of the stage, is the featured player, but fails to make any great impression as a screen star. Robert Frazier in the leading male role gives a good performance and the balance of the strong cast do as well as possible with the roles that offer little opportunity.

There is a great deal of coincidence in the plot and familiar situations are used throughout. The production suffers too from settings that do not measure up to present day standards, direction that is not of the best and photography and lightings that could be improved upon.

All in all it is a program picture, probably a satisfactory offering for certain markets, but not to be considered as a first run prospect where specials are desired.

The Cast

Louise Caldwell.....Violet Heming
Eldred Caldwell, George Stevenson.....Robert Frazer
Richard Manners.....Sheldon Lewis
Dr. Thorpe.....Huntley Gordon
Lieut.-Col. Potter.....J. Barney Sherry
Frank Warren, U. S. Consul.....David Wall
"The White Angel".....Julia Swayne Gordon
Nazim.....Nicholas Thompson
A British Tommy.....Tammany Young

Story by Donald McGibney. Scenario by Peter Milne. Direction by Ray C. Smallwood. Produced by Pyramid Pictures, Inc.

The Story—Attractive cabaret entertainer is pursued by bad "man about town." She marries sterling young chap and they eventually are found to be living in the Orient where the husband is employed in a bank. Their fifth anniversary celebration is interrupted by the "bad man" turning up again. For a reason unexplained, he continues in his pursuit and goes to the extent of framing a forgery on the husband, through the use of a man who is so like him that when the "dupe" commits suicide, it is believed to be the bank man. At the last it is discovered that the innocent man answered the call of the desert and became a "Sheik" and is ultimately reunited with the supposed widow.

Exploitation—Play up to followers of "Sheik" offerings, and those who enjoy Oriental and desert locale.

Drawing Power—Dwell on names of well-known players in cast embracing talented favorites.

"Breaking Home Ties"

Manheimer-Associated Exhibitors-Pathe—Six Reels

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

BASED upon "Eli, Eli," a traditional Hebrew melody, "Breaking Home Ties" is a screen drama of the type made familiar to picture audiences in "Humoresque," "The Good Provider," "Your Best Friend," and the like. This genre, dealing with the intimate home life of a Hebrew family under adversity, carries a strong heart appeal and offers great opportunity for emotional drama.

Although well done, "Breaking Home Ties" does not differ radically from those which have gone before. The types in the cast are rather similar, and a young violinist figures importantly in the story, as in "Humoresque." Hence, comparisons are inevitable, and as far as is possible to determine from a pre-view, "Breaking Home Ties" seems to compare well with its predecessors. Being based upon "Eli, Eli," it should carry an even stronger appeal than the others of this type in certain sections.

The picture is full of touches of comedy and pathos throughout, and Frank N. Seltzer, the 23-year-old director who presided over its destinies, deserves credit for the human note which he has maintained throughout.

The cast has been well typed. Lee Kohlmar and Rebecca Weintraub, as Father and Mother Bergman, and Richard Farrell, as their son, David, are entrusted with the heaviest roles, and should register a distinct hit. The main theme of the picture, and the title, centre about the relations of these characters—the separation when the son leaves home, the failure later to locate him, and the final reunion, furnish the plot thread upon which the incidents are strung.

The balance of the cast, Arthur Ashley, Betty Howe, Jane Thomas, Henry B. Schaffer, Maude Hill and Robert Maxmillian deliver capable work in the various roles.

It is a well made picture of its type and should please the audiences for which it is particularly designed. Whether it will score the general triumph that one or two others of this type did, only the story at the box-office can tell.

The Cast

Father Bergman.....Lee Kohlmar
Mother Bergman.....Rebecca Weintraub
David Bergman.....Richard Farrell
Paul Zeidman.....Arthur Ashley
Esther.....Betty Howe
Rose Neuman.....Jane Thomas
J. B. Martin.....Henry B. Schaffer
Mrs. Martin.....Maude Hill
Moskowitz.....Robert Maxmillian

Story and scenario by Frank N. Seltzer and George K. Rolands. Directed by Frank N. Seltzer. Produced by E. S. Manheimer.

The Story—Youth flees from home in Russia, after supposedly killing friend in jealous quarrel. Parents fail in business. The youth, in America, becomes a successful lawyer. The parents come to America, but are unable to locate him. They are finally taken to poorhouse by hero's fiancee, a settlement worker. Here all are finally reunited.

Classification—Heart interest drama of pathos, comedy and romance, centering about Hebrew family.

Production Highlights—The little heart interest touches in the direction. The work of Lee Kohlmar, Rebecca Weintraub and Richard Farrell. The excellent atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—Suggest that this is another "Humoresque." Make strong appeal to those who will be particularly interested in this subject. Play up the heart interest angle, around the title.

Drawing Power—Should draw well in many communities, particularly in the larger cities.

"The Blind Bargain"

Goldwyn—5,000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

AND here, kind friends, we have the "entertaining" subject of monkey glands and their use in bringing nearer the fountain of eternal youth, made into a wild melodrama which can hardly be classified as being up to the usual Goldwyn standard. Close-ups of divers operating rooms, a repulsive face on the Hunchback, one of the characters; the crushing to death of the surgeon by one of his experiment victims—an ape-man and other equally spine-shivering events make this picture a doubtful one to offer the Tired Business Man or his equally fatigued wife who come to your theatre to seek solace from the cares of the day.

The one redeeming feature of "The Blind Bargain," is the really remarkable character work of Lon Chaney. His work as the Hunchback seems almost inhuman. It is a thing apart from the usual run of screen portraits. Never has an actor approached nearer resemblance to ape-like movements. Diametrically opposed to this role is that of the scientist whose vivid imagination leads him into strange paths and who by surgical operations has been seeking a method to preserve youth indefinitely. This latter interpretation is a most convincing one. Either of these roles in less talented hands would be ridiculous.

The picture has been well directed by Wallace Worsley, who has supplied several thrilling situations. The photography throughout is up to the usual fine Goldwyn quality. One thing is sure. This will thrill your patrons. The story is anything but convincing and belongs in the old dime novel class. The scenes of the operating rooms will be a delight to seasoned practitioners. The climax of the picture is actionful. It includes a real battle between the doctor and his victim and the crushing to death of the surgeon by a terrible looking ape-man.

The Cast

Dr. Arthur Lamb / The Hunchback ..... Lon Chaney
Robert Sandell ..... Raymond McKee
Mrs. Sandell ..... Virginia True Boardman
Mrs. Lamb ..... Fontaine LaRue
Angela Marshall ..... Jacqueline Logan

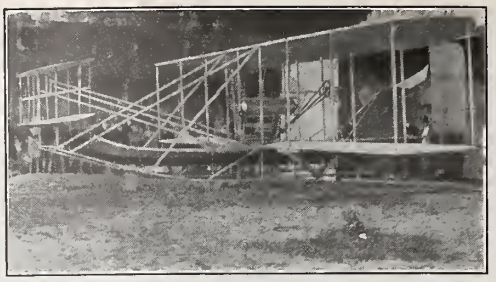
Adapted from "The Octave of Claudius," by Barry Pain. Directed by Wallace Worsley. Scenario by J. G. Hawks. Photographed by Nobert Brodin.

The Story: Robert Sandell is out of work. His mother is in need of an immediate operation to save her life. A noted surgeon promises to save her if the son will submit to an operation whereby glands of an animal will be transferred to the youth, giving him the strength of ten men and 100 years of life. A former victim of the surgeon, a hunchback, tries to warn the youth. The operation is prevented when an ape-man escapes from a cell in the underground operating departments of the surgeon's home and crushes the doctor to death. Sandell later sells the story of his adventure to a newspaper syndicate and finds happiness in the love of Angela Marshall, whom he marries.

Classification: A weird melodrama with Lon Chaney again doing some remarkable character work, but possessing little of entertainment value.

Production Highlights: The dual characterization of Dr. Lamb and the Hunchback, contributed by Lon Chaney. The attack of the Doctor by Sandell and the good night photography attending the fight. The operating room detail. The elaborate ball room set and the colorful Bubble Ballet. The scene in which the ape-man breaks from his cell and kills the doctor.

Exploitation Angles: There has been much discussion in the press and elsewhere on the subject of monkey glands, etc., and their use in prolonging the life of man. Would suggest cooperation with physicians in your town to start a newspaper discussion when you show this one, which is based almost entirely upon the idea. Play up Chaney big.



A machine that plays an important part in the Universal Novelty Reel "The Birth of Aviation."

"The Crow's Nest"

Aywon—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ONE can always find pretty fair entertainment whenever Jack Hoxie adorns a western. He usually dominates a story and the spectator may easily forget its obviousness so much spirit and enthusiasm does the cowboy star put into his work. "The Crow's Nest" is of an orthodox design—one that would be utterly lacking in entertainment values were it not for Hoxie's horsemanship and the fact that the story is bolstered up with lively action and a few comedy gags.

Here we have the abducted heroine and her ultimate rescue. We also have the white boy adopted by a squaw whose birth certificate is stolen by the villain because the lad is heir to a ranch. You can guess the outcome from the opening reel, but due to Hoxie's thrilling methods of extricating himself from danger you don't pay much attention to the idea—"where have I seen that before?" Jack has an intelligent horse—one that might make Mix's Tony hustle for first honors if given a chance. He does everything that the star asks of him.

The plot develops into the eventual triumph of virtue over villainy. After the boy has grown to manhood he finds his birth certificate and wins the girl. There is adequate atmosphere in the picture, not only in the extras but also in the exteriors. The humor has its inning in the novel manner of Hoxie's escape. "The Crow's Nest" is well fortified with a snappy tempo. There are no draggy moments. The ridin' and shootin' will keep most anyone interested. Evelyn Nelson makes a pleasing heroine, possessing screen personality and charm.

The Cast

Esteban ..... Jack Hoxie
Esteban as a boy ..... Ruddel Weatherwax
Patricia Benton ..... Evelyn Nelson
Beauguard ..... Tom Lingham
Pecos ..... Billy Lester
Timberline ..... William Dyer
Margarita ..... Mary Bruce
John Benton ..... Bert Lindley
The Squaw ..... Augustina Lopez

By William Lester. Directed by Paul Hurst. Photographed by William Nobles. Released by Aywon.

The Story—Treats of a boy brought up by squaw who believes her to be his mother. In reality he is white and heir to a ranch. A villain steals his birth certificate proving that the lad is white. Years later the youth learns the truth and so the barrier is erased. He wins the girl.

Classification—Western melodrama based upon blood barrier to true romance.

Production Highlights—The action which is rather lively. The exteriors and atmosphere. The adequate acting. Jack Hoxie's horsemanship.

Exploitation Angles—Suggests a teaser campaign with title. Would advise to keep the plot a secret since it has been done for many years. The best angle in our opinion is to feature the always dependable Jack Hoxie.

Drawing Power—Will possibly draw in second class downtown houses and in those localities where they want westerns regardless of their unoriginality, just so long as there's plenty of action.

"Down to the Sea in Ships"

Elmer Clifton—Twelve Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHAT will be written in screen histor as a masterpiece of its kind is offere in Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships —a romance of the golden days of whalin Taking more than a year to produce, it pr sents mute testimony that anything extraor dinary in production cannot be achieved b working per schedule. Here is a pictur which exudes the richest kind of atmospher local color, detail and romance. It is auther tic because Clifton went up to the whalin city, New Bedford, and gained the coopera tion of its people. The director has gotte away from the beaten path.

This romance of 1850 when the whalin industry was at its peak is unusual in its de parture from the conventions. You migh say that it is impossible to record the adven turous lives of the whalemen in an accurat manner. Yet Clifton has done it. He ha not only brought forth a series of truly sen sational scenes such as the sighting of th whales and the pursuit of them with the sub sequent stirring episode when a mighty bul monster is harpooned, but he lifts the veil o romance which covers the Quakers and thei faith. The characters with the exception o the protagonist are members of the Society of Friends. We are taken into the meetin house and shown the Quakers carrying ou their quaint customs. The marriage cere mony is one highly appealing episode.

While the picture brings forth the whaling industry of the fifties with its dramatic mo ments revolving around this vital enterpris of yesteryear, there is also interwoven a ro mance, the background of which is colorec with a rich glamour. The relics and heir looms of the dead past live again with al their picturesque atmosphere. It serves as an education as well as an entertainment Everything, seemingly, has been done to make it complete with the color and detai of the period in which it is laid. Painstaking care is behind every touch—every incident It's a heart story as well as a graphic one And because it is so unusual in theme, char acterization and production, it will be talkec about as one of the sensations of the year The photography is exceptional, and the act ing is genuine.

Raymond McKee, Marguerite Courtot Clara Bow and Patrick Hartigan contribute especially good performances. The realism the glamour of the romantic day in which it it laid, and the production values make it sure in its appeal. The title has a magnetic quality.

The Cast

Charles W. Morgan ..... William Walcott
Henry Morgan ..... William Cavanaugh
"Scuff" Smith ..... Leigh R. Smith
Patience Morgan ..... Marguerite Courtot
Thomas Allen Dexter ..... Raymond McKee
Judy Peggs ..... Juliette Courtot
Nahoma ..... Clarice Vance
Town Crier ..... Curtis Pierce
"Dot" Morgan ..... Clara Bow
Jake Finner ..... Patrick Hartigan
Samuel Siggs ..... J. Thornton Baston

Scenario by John L. E. Pell. Directed by Elmer Clifton. Photographed by Alexander G. Penrod.

The Story—Treats of the romantic and adventurous days of the whaling industry in New England, with a youth who wins the consent of his sweetheart's father to marriage by becoming a whaleman and accepting the Quaker faith.

Classification—Romance of whaling industry in 1850.

Production Highlights—The romance, atmosphere, photography, thrills attending the chase and harpooning of the whale, the Quaker scenes. The action. The human interest.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise featuring this in big way. Title is a winner. Suggests great opportunities for colorful lobby display and prologue.

Drawing Power—Should go big everywhere.

"Thirty Days"

Paramount—4930 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

IT'S all wrong! This idea that a star's popularity can be depended upon to put any mediocre picture over. "Thirty Days" just about reaches low ebb in the tide of Wallace Reid productions. It holds little in the way of entertainment and smacks at times of Mack Sennett comedy—in fact the introduction of our old friend Kalla Pasha in one of the principal roles does much to give one this impression. "Wally" himself has little to do. He has the role of a man who is continually sought by a jealous Italian who finds his wife in the star's arms, which gives the excuse to begin a lot of the chase stuff that continues up to the final scene. Wallace doesn't look or act himself in this picture. He lacks the old time pep and this picture shows that he was in need of his present rest. Miss Hawley is an attractive support and wears some stunning gowns.

The scenes in the jail when Wally discovers a shortage in the books and is immediately showered with favors by the warden are fairly amusing, but are highly unconvincing. Oh yes, Wally goes to jail for hitting his rival in the nose. The rival howls murder. The judge howls "Thirty Days!" The moments in the last reel when the outraged husband gains entrance to the house, the star grabs his friend the judge by mistake and wraps him up in a curtain, standing him upside down in the corner and Wanda saves Wally just as the Italian is about to plant a two foot butcher knife between his ribs are the next and last thing of interest in a picture that is filled with unessentials and not to be proud of in continuity.

One gathers the impression that "Thirty Days" is not up to the usual standard. To James Cruze, however, should go credit for ably directing the meager material at hand. Photographically everything is O.Keh. So is the mounting. But, alas, folks demand more than photographs and settings.

The Cast

John Floyd.....Wallace Reid
Lucy Ledyard.....Wanda Hawley
Huntley Palmer.....Cyril Chadwick
Mrs. Floyd.....Helen Dunbar
Judge Hooker.....Charles Ogle
Giacomo Polenta.....Herschall Mayall
Rosa Polenta.....Carmen Phillips
Marcel.....Kalla Pasha
Prof. Huxley.....Robert Brower

By A. E. Thomas and Clayton Hamilton. Directed by James Cruze. Adapted by Walter Woods. Photographed by Karl Brown.

The Story: In befriending a beautiful Italian woman, John Cadwalader Floyd incurs the jealousy of her husband, a reservist who is leaving for Italy in 28 days. In seeking safety from the man, John gets his friend, Judge Hooker, to send him to jail for 30 days. He however, finds the Italian there also. He is also somewhat embarrassed when his fiancee also finds him there. He is pardoned just before the Italian is to sail. The Italian's wife warns John, who with the aid of two of his jail pals, and his fiancee, capture the villain in the hero's home, wrap him up in a rug and deliver him to the steamer which is to take him to Italy.

Classification—A farce comedy with too much farce.

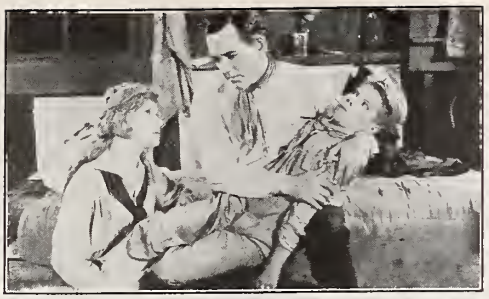
Production Highlights—The discovery of John holding the little Italian wife in his arms and the ensuing attempt of the husband to do away with the hero via the knife route. The scenes in the jail. The capture of the Italian in the last reel. Carmen Phillips as the Italian wife.

Exploitation Angles—The title. The star. Offers a good opportunity to tie up with the merchants in your town in stimulating sales of announcing "Buy now. Thirty Days to pay!" Get photos from "Thirty Days" in all the store windows co-operating. Wouldn't advise many superlatives on this one, however.

Drawing Power—Star will draw them but they are apt to be disappointed. Best suited for neighborhood houses.



A scene from "His Enemy's Friend," with Leo Maloney in one of the two reel Ranger Rider Series, Pathe

"Boss of Camp 4"

Fox—4235 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY'VE given Charles (Buck) Jones plenty to do with this live western. Really he has the busiest time of his screen career in this picture of elemental conflict—a picture which contains as snappy a line of action as "The Fast Mail." The star will astonish you in his ability to escape death or serious injury, so thrilling are the situations in which he is involved. He not only fights through scene after scene but he is also called upon to dodge boulders and what not that are shoved toward him by the villain. The plot may be crude but it packs a wallop. And the action never drags.

It may be unoriginal, for you can easily anticipate what is coming, but nevertheless the suspense of the situations eliminates the obvious note. Jones starts off with a lively fight—protecting a young fellow from the camp bully. And he has his hands full to the end of the picture. The star portrays the part of a foreman on a road construction job and when he takes the side of the contractor (there's a reason for this as the boss has a pretty daughter) he stirs up the hatred of the boss of the camp. The foreman forces the men back to work but in doing so the villain gets busy with the boulders, which are sent crashing after him. The tempo is unusually good, for the fights are given enough substance to carry through the plot. It is one long succession of fights.

Eventually the villain is determined to "get" the hero for interfering with his scheme of preventing the completion of the road. The situation presents the big punch. Jones, seemingly, has the whole camp against him. He climbs out on the limb of a tree, lowers himself by a rope and when it is cut by the villains, he lands in the cabin of the arch conspirator where the battle is continued. The suspense accompanies the bristling action straight to the end. Jones makes a thrilling escape before the happy ending arrives. It is a he-man picture—one of the best which the star has ever made. It will add greatly to his popularity.

The Cast

Chet Fanning.....Charles Jones
Iris Paxton.....Fritzi Brunette
Dave Miller.....G. Raymond Nye
Dude McCormick.....Francis Ford
Warren Zome.....Sid Jordan
Andrew Paxton.....Milton Ross

By Arthur P. Haskins. Scenario by Paul Schofield. Directed by W. S. Van Dyck. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Foreman of road construction job has difficulties completing his task due to conspiracy of the boss of the camp and his associates who would prevent him from finishing the contract on time. The foreman wins the fight and also wins the contractor's daughter.

Classification—Actionful melodrama releasing plenty of exciting incident and thrills. Presents a hero who never gives up the fight.

Production Highlights—The crisp action. The thrills and suspense. Jones busy every minute. The escape of the hero.

Exploitation Angles—Snappy enough to please every variety of fan who loves westerns. Would advise featuring it as way above the average story of its type. Would tell fans that Jones has the liveliest picture since "The Fast Mail."

"The Pride of Palomar"

Cosmopolitan-Paramount—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE are very few variations offered in this familiar story on an old theme. The idea features the mortgage, but it doesn't cover the old homestead of a rural New Englander. Instead it casts an ominous shadow over a Spanish hacienda in California. It seems to us as if the plot featured something in the shape of propaganda against Japanese colonization although it is more or less cloaked by the mortgage.

However, there is some jingoism displayed in a few of the titles and the hero has occasion to throw the wily Jap out of the window for striking a match on a bust of George Washington. Again he refuses to dispose of his rich estate unless the buyer promises not to sell it in turn to Japanese colonizers. A little less of this (shall we call it jingoism?) would make the story more entertaining. The Oriental is frustrated naturally, but his parting shot carries the warning that an army of his countrymen will some day take the land for themselves. The hero is a son of a Spanish Don who dies of a broken heart when he hears the false news that the boy is killed in the war. The youth comes home to discover that the father of the girl he met on the train holds the mortgage on the property. He has a year to pay it off and manages to gain the needed sum by clearing up a heavy debt and betting money on his race horse.

The romantic scenes are interesting. So are those featuring the atmosphere of the turf. But Frank Borzage has noticed his plot slipping, so he resorts to padding here and there and slowing up his action to extend through the footage. The girl's father is a speculator. And he plays the game fairly and squarely. The mortgage is paid off at the exact moment when it is to be foreclosed. With the plot spending itself in the middle of the picture it stands to reason that the director was up against it in keeping it even. We have to admit that it becomes jumpy toward the finish. Forrest Stanley is miscast as the young Don.

The Cast

Don Mike.....Forrest Stanley
Kay Parker.....Marjorie Daw
Pablo.....Tote De Crow
Father Dominic.....James Barrow
Don Miguel.....Joseph Dowling
John Parker.....Alfred Allen
Conway.....George Nicholls
Okada.....Warner Oland
Mrs. Parker.....Mrs. Jessie Hebbard
Butler.....Percy Williams
Caroline.....Mrs. George Hernandez
Lostolet.....Edward Brady
Mrs. Supaldio.....Carmen Arscella
Nogi.....Eagle Eye
Alexandria.....Most Mattoe

By Peter B. Kyne. Scenario by Grant Carpenter and John Lynch. Directed by Frank Borzage. Produced by Cosmopolitan. Distributed by Paramount.

The Story—Soldier son of Spanish Don, a California settler, returns from war to find his father dead and his ancestral estate in the hands of a wealthy westerner, whose object is to close a deal with a prosperous Jap. The youth plans to recover his property and succeeds with the aid of the westerner's daughter. The Jap is frustrated in his plans and the wealthy father of the girl takes his defeat in manly fashion.

Classification—Romantic drama carrying conflict between California property owner and Jap. Plot peculiar to California.

Production Highlights—The fine atmosphere. The racing scenes. The backgrounds. The fight incident. The romantic appeal.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise tieing up with book-dealers on author's novels. Plot suggests a ballyhoo with riders attired in Mexican costumes parading the streets. Suggests a colorful prologue with hacienda and court for a background and Spanish dances featured.

Drawing Power—Will please in most localities. Downtown houses will like it.

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is so much color, glamour adventure and romance interwoven in a Stevenson novel that it never fails to make highly entertaining screen material. Take "Ebb Tide" for example. While the pattern itself is familiar there is always something of interest when a derelict ship puts out at sea manned by a picturesque skipper and a derelict crew. George Melford can always be trusted with a story of this type. His shots and atmosphere are always colorful, and he has a happy faculty in blending the primitive elements against such a background. The scenario is well prepared by Waldemar Young with the result that the action is always progressive.

Stevenson knew his South Seas and "Ebb Tide" is one of his most romantic tales. And George Fawcett gives such a forceful performance as the old skipper whose unquenchable thirst has got the best of him that he seemingly steps right out of the novel, giving breadth and vitality to the character. The author must have visualized just such a figure. He knocks around Tahiti with two derelicts. Huish, a Cockney from London's slums, and Herrick, who once was a gentleman. The three board the decrepit ship whose owners are eager to have her sink so as to collect the insurance and they set sail into the Pacific. A storm develops which carries a vivid note and when the skipper is well liquored he finally brings the derelict boat into the harbor of an uncharted island on which lives a solitary white man and his daughter. This man amasses pearls which the natives bring up from the bottom. He has sworn vengeance upon any white man who trespasses upon his island paradise. The skipper and the cockney want his pearls, while the erstwhile gentleman, still romancing, wants the girl. And since he is the only white man she has ever seen it is natural that she would be charmed by his personality.

The romance is accompanied by several highly adventurous scenes which carry the utmost in incident and suspense. The ne'er-do-well is regenerated through the love that is offered him by the girl. The South Sea story is always with us. It's too bad we can't have more like "Ebb Tide." Finely directed and staged, telling a straightforward story from a well prepared scenario, and intelligently acted by George Fawcett, Raymond Hatton and James Kirkwood, it offers the spectator a real treat. Tom Geraghty has supervised the production so that everything is compact. There are no loose ends visible anywhere in "Ebb Tide."

The Story—Old sea captain with a couple of derelict companions brings his ship to anchor in the harbor of an uncharted island of the South Seas. On this island lives a solitary white man and his daughter. The youngest derelict falls in love with the girl and is regenerated, but her father has sworn that any white man who lands on the island will not leave it alive. The hero conquers.

Classification—Adventure romance laid in the South Seas.

Production Highlights—The atmosphere and backgrounds. The work of Kirkwood, Fawcett and Beery. The romantic interest.

Exploitation Angles—Here you have an adaptation of a story by Stevenson and Osborne. We would advise you make the most of such publicity. The picture suggests a colorful prologue. Would advise featuring the cast since it contains several favorites who can act.

"Thelma"

F. B. O.—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

ONE hardly expects a novelty picture play from a story adapted from a book written as many years ago as was Marie Corelli's "Thelma." Nevertheless, that is about what the F. B. O. picture offers, insomuch as photoplays embracing Norwegian locale, atmospheric background and quaint plots are not common. "Thelma," therefore is recommended as a novelty, notwithstanding that it is a revival of what was a widely read story of yesteryear.

From a production standpoint "Thelma" will win new friends, since necessary background and appropriate sets have been provided in addition to the well balanced cast selected. Jane Novak delivers a splendid characterization of the old fashioned Norwegian girl and assumes the role of Lady Errington with admirable poise. Scenes showing her introduction to the nobility of which her husband is a member, are well done.

Bert Sprotte, also, gives a commendable performance in the role of the last of the Vikings, and Vernon Steel admirably maintains the appealing character of Sir Philip. The direction and photography are much above the average, and in view of the mass of detail identified with the original story, it may be said that "Thelma" is a splendid screen version of Marie Corelli's popular novel.

The Cast

|---|---|
| Thelma | Jane Novak |
| Britta | Barbara Tennant |
| Lovissa | Gordon Mullin |
| Olaf | Bert Sprotte |
| Philip | Vernon Steel |
| Lorimer | Peter Burke |
| Sigurd | Jack Rollens |
| Dyceworthy | Harry Clark |
| Lady Clara | June Elvidge |
| Lennox | Wedgwood Nowell |
| Little Thelma | Virginia Novak |

Story by Marie Corelli. Adaptation by Thomas Dixon, Jr. Directed by Chester Bennett. Photographed by Jack MacKenzie. Produced by Chester Bennett. Distributed by Film Booking Offices of America.

The Story—Thelma, native of a Norway peasant village, was loved by all who had not been poisoned against her by Lovisa, a hag, the victim of hatred, herself, and who delighted in heaping sorrow upon others. Thelma, the daughter of a strict, though loving father, did not know what love meant until the coming of Sir Philip Errington. When she appeared in London as his bride, her reception occasioned the jealousy of Philip's so called friends, who plotted to separate the happy pair. There comes a time, however, when Thelma is assured of her husband's faithfulness, and all ends well.

Classification—A cross between society and rural melodrama. Begins in Norway, is carried on in England and ends in Norway.

Production Highlights—Struggle of Sir Philip to maintain hold of rock, while his hands are tortured by fiend who is infatuated with Thelma. Thelma's introduction to London society. The burning of the ship on which Olaf, the stern father, sails to his death, after custom of his ancestors.

Exploitation Angles—Tie up with book stores. Memory tests regarding titles of Marie Corelli's works, their date of issue might work to advantage.

Drawing Power—Offer Jane Novak in an appealing role, and mention number of screen favorites who complete the cast.

"The World's a Stage"

Principal Pictures—By Arrangement With First National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN interesting picture of the trials and tribulations of an actress is presented here in "The World's A Stage," written by Elinor Glyn. The authoress has penned a simple document—one filled with human interest and sentiment and carrying enough conflict for dramatic purposes. There are no bizarre scenes such as you might expect from the English novelist. Instead she merely takes you behind the footlights, behind the studio sets, and shows you that the people of the make-believe world are as human as folks in other walks of life.

Local color greets us when we see a cheap barnstorming troupe interpreting Shakespeare in a western mining camp. The novel note is introduced when a picture director, looking for locations on his friend's property, notices her performance as Juliet and determines to sign her up as a screen actress. We are then taken on a studio set with Hollywood as the center of activities.

From this point the story comes forward with a tense conflict of emotion as the new screen celebrity realizes that she is in love with a wealthy youth. Being a short romance she has not had time to weigh the consequences of marrying in haste and repenting at leisure. Disillusionment comes on the wedding night when her husband becomes beastly drunk. The actress is thoroughly unhappy, but decides to plunge into her work and forget. The man who introduced her to her husband is ever in the background with good counsel and advice.

This, naturally, precipitates a conflict between the two men. The husband registers jealousy on every occasion and the dramatic moments develop until a smashing climax is revealed when the drunken spouse seeks an explanation. He will see whether he is ruler in his own home! He takes his wife on a mad motor trip in a driving rainstorm and the machine crashes through a bridge into the water. Luckily the good friend is close behind. So the victims are rescued. The wife forgives her husband before he dies. And happiness comes at last with the other man.

The picture is effective in its human appeal and is one of the best audience attractions of the season. Dorothy Phillips' emotional talent is given worthy expression in this study of the triangle. It's a story very close to reality—well directed and maintaining the interest throughout.

The Cast

|---|---|
| Jo Bishop | Dorothy Phillips |
| Wallace Foster | Kenneth Harlan |
| John Brand | Bruce McRae |
| Richard Manseld Bishop | Otis Harlan |
| Property Man | Jack McDonald |

By Elinor Glyn. Directed by Colin Campbell. Presented by Principal Pictures by arrangement with First National.

The Story—Star of Shakespearian troupe which becomes stranded in small western mining town, appeals to motion picture director on location in the camp. Through the influence of wealthy miner she becomes a screen celebrity. Love comes to her in Hollywood and she marries a young wastrel. Her husband, however, makes her life a nightmare, and after a series of misfortunes, she finds happiness with the miner after her husband's tragic death.

Classification—Reveals story of screen star's life in Hollywood. Eternal triangle figures as does much human interest. Also offers much local color as found in a cheap road company.

Production Highlights—The fine work of Dorothy Phillips. The local color and atmosphere of the stage scenes and studio scenes. The conflict between Brand and Foster. The disillusionment of the bride. The auto tragedy when the husband loses his life. The human note.

Exploitation Angles — Suggests capitalizing title which Shakespeare made famous. Also would advise playing up author and mentioning her other stories. Would advise playing up star.

With the Kansas City Branches

He is spending a few weeks around the local territory before going on to the road again.

George Bradley, publicity and exploitation director for Universal in this territory has returned to the city after a short trip on the road in the Western part of the state. While on his trip he made arrangements for the exploitation of "The Storm" when it is used as the opening attraction at H. K. Dunham's new Rose theatre in Mt. Vernon, Wash., on Deeember 15. The theatre is at the present time under construetion, but finishing touehes are being put on and a big opening is being planned by Mr. Dunham.

Louis Rosenberg, sales manager for De Luxe just returned from a trip in southern Oregon, and after spending a few days here left for Spokane, working out of that city for several days.

No bookings have been announced on the picture yet, but it is expected that it will be shown in the larger cities in this territory during the early part of Deeember.

"Remembrance," the Goldwyn special, was recently booked to open the Maek theatre of Port Angeles by Manager Mack J. Davis. After being under construetion for several months, the $75,000 house was recently completed and is to take its place shortly among the finest small town show houses of the state, according to film men who have visited it. A large pipe organ, latest model projectors, air cooling apparatus and other modern convenienees have been put into the house by Mr. Davis, who spared no expense in planning a perfect theatre.

Buffalo Brevities

Charles Jackson has been transferred as assistant manager at the Loew State to the same position at the Loew house in London, Ont., Charlie's home town. Sidney Gates, who hails from New York city, has been appointed new assistant to Manager Al Beckerich.

Manager James Savage has added vaudeville to his picture program at the Central Park and has boosted his box office figures quite noticeably. The Central Park is a neighborhood house controlled by General Theatres corporation.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," will be presented to Buffalo by M. Shea at Shea's Hippodrome in the near future. The old Hipp is tacking up new business records each week and deservedly so, because one would have to go some to beat the programs offered at this house.

Walter Hays, Mark-Strand official, has returned from a two-week motor and hunting trip through northern New York. From a hunting viewpoint it was a great motor trip.

Buffalonians stormed the Shea vaudeville house last week to see Bessie Barriscale and Howard Hickman in their snappy act. Bessie received an enthusiastic reception at every performance.

Chauncey Goler of Rochester has leased the Gem theatre in Bath, N. Y., for one year and is presenting pictures each evening and Saturday matinee. The Gem is the only picture theatre in town as the Park was burned to the ground a few weeks ago. The Comerford Amusement company, however, is building a new motion picture theatre in the town.

The Kensington theatre, managed by Jim Cardino, was entered by burglars one evening last week. The Yeggs knocked the combination off the safe, but got nothing for their efforts. Probably a bum day's business, eh, Jim?

Anita Stewart is coming to Buffalo in person early in January. She will appear at the Lafayette Square.

Eugene A. Pfeil, manager of the Strand, put on a revival week commencing Sunday, November 19, changing his bill each day and offering the following program: Sunday, "Through the Back Door"; Monday, "The Sheik"; Tuesday, "Humoresque"; "Wednesday, "Dream Street"; Thursday, "Something to Think About"; Friday, "The Miracle Man"; Saturday, "The Mollycoddle." It looked like old times in the Strand lobby so big was the attendance at every show.

Eddie Weinberg, former manager of the local Strand, is now in Schenectady preparing for the opening of the new State in that city, but on February 1 he will go to Troy to assume the management of the new Strand in that city.

In Boston's Film Center

THE Goldwyn company will open an additional regional office in New Haven, Conn., within the next two weeks, that place taking over some of the New England work which has been covered entirely from Boston. An auditor is now on the ground transferring accounts from Boston.

Harry Campbell, district manager for the Fox Film Corporation at their Boston office, hied himself to the wilds of Maine a few days ago, laden down with all manner of shooting irons. He said he would not show up again around "Film Row" for a month. Let's hope that he proves as efficient in bagging game as he has in bagging contracts.

Benjamin Abrams, booker at the Goldwyn's Boston office, has also gone North to Maine, though he is hunting contracts. He has received a boost to the position of salesman for the state of Maine and is already on the ground.

Lots of the shining lights in the Boston district have been voluntarily and temporarily extinguished. Fred Schafer, district manager for Famous Players, left for New York Thursday, and Friday left on the special for the Famous Players convention in Los Angeles. With him went Walter Scates, the branch manager, and they both merrily remarked in passing from familiar haunts that they would not be back until time to cut the turkey Thanksgiving Day.

Sam Grand, president of the Federated Film Exchange, has also gone to Los Angeles, though not to the F. P. shindig. He is on vacation bent to the tune of four weeks. He left Friday.

J. N. Kline has been added to the Goldwyn New England sales staff, and started making the fur fly in Eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island on November 11.

James R. Granger, assistant to the president of the Goldwyn Corporation, showed up in Boston for three days last week, with a view to looking over conditions in general. He looked them over from first to last and said as he went that they were booming. No kick coming there.

Joe Partridge, who has been well known during his connection with the Boston office of Educational, severs his ties there next Saturday and hits the trail for New York. He hasn't said what's what yet, but will let his legion of friends know shortly what the new thing is.

Stanley Waite, who made a lot of friends while manager for Associated Exhibitors in Boston, is now Pathe's manager here, and is due to make a lot more. Gerald Myers takes his place with Associated.

Charles L. Winston, formerly with Famous Players, is now the Boston "Goldwyner." Think of his pep coupled with the well known brand that has made Manager Perry famous as an exploiter and watch things hum in that poster bedecked office.

Boston Chatter

The newest of Metropolitan Boston's large motion picture theatres will open its doors to the public in a week now. The official opening has been set as Tuesday November 28. The house is the latest in the widely known chain owned and operated by the Olympia Theatres Inc., of which Nathan H. Gordon is president. The building is the last word in theatre design, with attention given primarily to the comfort and safety of the patrons. It has been named the Capitol and will seat more than 1,500.

The Olympia chain is a purely New England organization, owners, directors, and executives being all New England business men. The directors are: George L. De Blois, George U. Crocker, Lee M. Friedman, Nathan H. Gordon, Hiram E. Miller, Al A. Rosenbush, Max Schoolman, Gerald G. E. Street, Frederic H. Tabor, and Patrick F. Lydon.

Many of the central Boston houses have been blossoming out of late with new dress in the shape of additional electric signs. Both the Modern and Beacon have made some additions, and the State and Orpheum, Loew houses, have added bright and shiny runners under the marquise just over the lobby entrance. The Park, where "When Knighthood Was in Flower" is playing, is almost completely behind a huge automatic sign that covers the entire front of the building and extends up for two stories.

Speaking of the Park, it has been well nigh remade for the occasion. The box office, which normally stands at the lobby entrance like any well bred picture house, was moved inside and installed at the side to leave a clear lobby. The lobby has been completely hung in expensive tapestries, with a predominance of things characteristic of the ages of chivalry. Rugs and carpets cover the floor.

Griffith's "One Exciting Night," in keeping with the Griffith policy, has been announced to close at the Tremont Temple in two weeks. It has been doing the usual S. R. O. business that has always characterized pictures shown here from that source, and more, has done something that a picture has never done before in Boston. It has called forth public praise from Mayor Curley, who has seen it at least three times.

Boston fans were lucky again last week. In addition to the two aforementioned specials they had many good pictures to make up their weekly entertainment. "Enter Madame," and "The Young Rajah" at the State; "The Man Who Played God," at the Boston; "The Curse of Drink," at the Globe; "Under Two Flags," at the Fenway; and "Gray Dawn," and "When Husbands Deceive" at the Modern and Beacon theatres. The suburban houses all carried good bills.

Around the Buffalo Exchanges

THURSDAY, November 23rd, was a Red Letter Day in the local Fox Film Company history, for on the evening of this day William Fox, president; W. R. Sheehan, vice-president, C. P. Sheehan, district manager and Charles N. Johnston, branch manager, welcomed exhibitors, other exchange managers, members of the press, city officials and friends to their new exchange building at 496 Pearl Street. The new exchange is one of the finest in the country and has every modern convenience for the efficient handling of business and the wants of the exhibitor. The building is a two-story structure. The offices are on the first floor. There are large vaults in the basement. On the second floor is the advertising department and the office of Clayton P. Sheehan, district manager. The Yankee Six provided music for the opening reception Thursday evening. There was a buffet luncheon and some of the new Fox features were screened. It was a gala affair.

There have been a number of changes in the staff of the local F. B. O. office. Al Barnett, former booker is now on the road. He visited the Utica and Binghamton territory last week and sent in some fine contracts. Esther Fetes has succeeded Mr. Barnett as booker. Margaret Taylor, formerly assistant to Mr. Barnett is now a stenographer on the office force and Margaret North is assisting Miss Fetes in the booking department. Gilbert Joseph has come to Buffalo to handle exploitation for the F.B.O exchange. Branch Manager Earl Kramer announces that Harry Rose played "In the Name of the Law," at the Star theatre, Tonawanda, last week and broke all box office records becaue of some fine exploitation. John M. Sitterly is now in the Rochester territory for F. B. O., Walter Bengough is covering Syracuse and R. W. Wheeler, the Southern Tier.

Allan S. Moritz, Paramount district manager, left Buffalo Thursday evening, November 16 on the Paramount special for Los Angeles. It is expected that the Buffalo office will be announced as one of the winners in the recent sales contest. If so, Buffalo may never see Allan again. He may buy out one of the producing companies on the coast. The local boys are getting set for the banquet which Harry Buxbaum will give following the gathering in of the quota for Buxbaum Week. Thomas Kilfoil, special representative for Paramount, is at the Buffalo exchange for a few weeks.

Martin Solomon of New York is temporarily assigned to the new Buffalo Varner Brothers' exchange. Miss Evans, formerly with United Artists, is back on her old job as booker for Manager P. H. Smith. with whom she was associated when Mr. Smith was manager of the U. A. office.

Phil Gentille, formerly with American Releasing, is now representing the New Graphic exchange in the Rochester district.

The then fire chief was killed while dynamiting buildings to check the flames. Panzer has been cast in the part of his ill-starred predecessor. Tough on him but the film must be historically correct. One of the old hand pump engines used on combating the big fire will be used in the films. It has been donated by the Missouri Historical Society.

A self-appointed committee in Quebec City has taken proceedings against the Victoria Theatre, Quebec, for alleged violation of the Lord's Day Act in giving Sunday performances at which an admission was charged. Announcement is also made that the Lord's Day Alliance is also taking action against a prominent local citizen who was one of the patrons of the theatre for a Sunday show. More than ordinary interest was taken in the presentation of "Salome," the Fox special in which Theda Bara is starred, at the Eden Theatre, Main Street, Hull, Quebec, on Saturday and Sunday, November 17 and 18. This run was arranged after the feature had been condemned by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, Hull being just across the river from the Province of Ontario, drawing considerable patronage from Ottawa, the Canadian Capital.

The fact that the feature had been condemned in Ontario was advertised in a newspaper of Ottawa, Ontario, with the expected result. Children under 16 years of age were not admitted to the Eden Theatre, however, for the "Salome" screening.

A number of prominent men of Ottawa, Ontario, are identified with the organization of the Tesa Films, Limited, a company which has been established for the purpose of producing moving pictures of various types. ## Baltimore Brevities

Maryland censors totally eliminated 23 films last year and caused many others to be changed and cut, Miss Marie Presstman, secretary of the State Board of Motion Picture Censors, told the League of Women Voters in a recent address. She stated that the board had turned in more than $7,000 to the State treasury during the year. Miss Presstman admitted that the work of the censors frequently met with objections from ministers and others in prominent positions in the community.

Two theatres will be added at the end of this month to the list of those operating in Baltimore. Five persons—a member of the Maryland censor board, a clergyman, a theatre manager, a Senator-elect and a woman prominent in political circles — were asked the question:

"What do you think of the idea of abolishing the moving picture censors?" was the question. C. F. Macklin, of the Censor Board, thought the law a good one; Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead though abolition would "be dangerous"; Leonard B. McLaughlin, of the Auditorium Theatre, is "still in favor of censorship"; Senator-elect William Cabell Bruce thinks the plan "impractical just now," and Miss Lavinia Engle, state manager of the League of Women Voters, sees the proposal "as a great mistake."

Florida Flashes

Liberty Day in Tampa will linger long in our memory. Though it came on Saturday, many of the stores closed all day, while the others closed from noon until 6 P. M. After the parade there was only the football game and the theatres to attract the great crowds, so both got capacity, with the theatres holding them out unil closing time. It was a perfect day.

Cooley, General Manager of the Consolidated Amusement Co., of Tampa, is always on the job to grab off good publicity stunts for his houses, so he had the members of the Florida and Mississippi football teams, who played in Tampa on Saturday, as his guests at the Victory on Friday night. As a special feature he staged a prologue, with two charming dancers, one representing Florida and the other Mississippi, putting over a very artistic dance, and Edward Kane rendering a solo. # Opinions on Current Short Subjects

Screen Snapshots No. 14
(Pathe—One Reel)

FANS who admire Charles Ray will be able to see him in the appealing character of himself as a farmer, up with the sun and doin' farmer boy chores. Pola Negri's arrival in New York and in Hollywood furnished some interesting views of the foreign star who recently came to America to play in pictures.

Carter DeHaven is a "baseball fan" and his talk with George Sisler, of the St. Louis team, depicts his interest in a game about to be played. Picturegoers who saw Eric Von Stroheim in "Foolish Wives" may see that the director does not look very different when not "made up" for a part. And besides these, there are some interesting shots showing Anita Stewart; Glenn Hunter and Horace Bouchers, naval architects, discussing ship building and the regiment of baby guests entertained at the home of Mae Murray and her director-husband, Robert Z. Leonard.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Sky Splitter"
(Hodkinson—One Reel)

IF there is such a thing as a "scientific comedy," the description will fit "The Sky Splitter," which is a sort of rural comedy woven around the life and amibtions of an old scientist engaged in the perfection of an invention. Following an accident, his contorted imagination is depicted in the old fellow's trip to another planet, and describes, under the guise of vision, the power of rays of light, the rapidity and distance they reach and gives a sort of insight into the study of light rays. It is entertaining, a sort of "sheep in wolves' clothing," to reverse the adage, insofar as this reel delves into a science, but at the same time holds to comedy. It was directed by Ashley Miller and J. A. Norling, both of whom have given the reel distinction.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Chased Bride"
(Educational—Two Reels)

WEDDING bells seem ever to remain as a part of a motion picture. Here, however, the picture begins with them, as well as culminates in the marital tie. "Helen," played by Vera Stedman, was about to marry the wrong man, who seemed to hold some sort of threat over her indulgent father. But the right man, played by Neal Burns, did not intend to be thwarted so easily so that the action centers around the means used by the right man to prevent the wedding ceremony. Complications set in with a vengeance, involving much comedy in the "get away" and final accomplishment of joining together the right girl to the right man. There is more plot than usual, connected with this bit of farce. It has been directed with a view to making a "trouble chaser" subject, and does very well.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Why Worry"
(Smart Films, Inc.—Two Reels)

THIS introduces the comedian Billy West in a series of new comedies, which is a species of "slap-stick" that may find favor among those who enjoy viewing this kind of comedy.

Most of the troubles, which bring about the comedy situations, take place in connection with a garage, owned by the father of "the girl," where the chief mechanician has designs upon the daughter, but she favors a "hero" type.

There is a great deal of action and it may be said that there is an element of "snappiness," indicating everything has been done to quicken the action and keep the laughs in rapid succession. The comedian is the usual low comedy type, wearing ill fitting clothes and always getting "in bad."—LILLIAN GALE.

"High Power"
(Educational—Two Reels)

WHEN a lad graduates from college, having developed ideas of his own about the kind of girl he expects to choose for a bride, he is naturally disconcerted to arrive at home, be told he has come to his own wedding and then find that "father" has picked out a wife for him who resembles a comic valentine. It follows, that the would-be bride has sufficient money to make her a prospective daughter-in-law, but when the college youth rebels, father sends him to cattle ranch, with instructions by wife to the superintendent to "tame" the young fellow.

At the same time, the ranch population is concerned about the presence of a "bad man," for whom a large reward is offered. By the juggling of photographs the "bad man" frames a picture of the "tenderfoot," so that when he arrives he is given a "warm reception."

This comedy is built for speed and as a typical "slap-stick" makes a bid for favor with followers of this type of picture.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Railroading"
(Burr-Educational—One Reel)

AN amusing travesty on the art of making motion pictures including scenes with train wrecks and the suspense that usually leads up to the disaster which destroys the villain and re-unites the hero with his heroine. It is done in cartoon, except for Earl Hurd, Jr., who acts as director, cameraman and scene shifter. To be exact, his cast includes a real live chick who plays the character role of "the flapper."

To the cartoon characters, the harmless house cat takes on the appearance of the mountain lion, and many characteristics of the motion ppicture actor and director are humorously depicted.

Splendid action, entertaining incident, especially appealing to children.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Saturday Morning"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

"OUR GANG" members are not unlike other boys who dread the Saturday morning exercises prescribed by mothers, such as practicing on a violin, wiping the dishes, or taking a bath. And the two reel subjects with the "gang" all present shows some of the members suffering varied Saturday morning complaints. Little Farina is subjected to a shower bath improvised by Sunshine Sammy and while there is no plot, most of the entertaining incidents relative to the children's pranks are those having to do with the morning before Sunday. It would be hard to say which of these several versatile children claim first honors. Little Farina, it will be admitted, is a true-to-life pickaninny and commands many laughs.—LILLIAN GALE.

Starland Revue No. 16
(F. B. O.—One Reel)

IN this one may see a number of stars from widely different departments of the theatrical profession. There is Florence Reed, in a scene from her new starring vehicle, "East of Suez"; Herbert Yost, star of "Why Men Leave Home"; Ula Sharon, who displays some elaborate gowns worn in the Greenwich Village Follies; Anna Fitziu, prima donna of the San Carlo Opera Company, selecting her favorite brand of tobacco to be made up into her "special" cigarettes; a camera interview with Tanaki Miura, famous Japanese songbird; Ned Wayburn rehearsing an "act" called the "Dancing Dozen," concluding with view showing Emma Haig, who suffered a broken back, by dancing off the stage in the Music Box Revue, completely healed and taking exercises to keep in "trim."—LILLIAN GALE.

Graphic No. 2548
(Educational—One Reel)

AN interesting personage is David P. Brown, New York Postman, who has walked 250,000 miles, delivering letters for forty-seven years in the Metropolis.

Evelyn Law, of the "Follies" "kicks" her salary higher every year, and decorates this reel with her presence.

Did you ever hear of a Godfather of 26? F. Scott Fitzgerald is one. There is a bit of entertaining footage, showing the young author at his Long Island home.

Graphic No. 2547
(Educational—One Reel)

HARVESTING grapes in the world's largest vineyard at Guasti, Cal., where 4,500 acres yield three million gallons of wine, annually, makes a picturesque run of footage, showing the picker at work and how, step by step the grapes are made into sacramental wine.

Golf enthusiasts will enjoy seeing Miss Glenna Collett, woman golf champion, and get a view of her "strokes," with the slow motion method of photography.

One of New York's spots of beauty which transients always hope to see is Central Park. How a run-away is checked along the "bridal path" makes interesting pictorial.

"Off Cape Cod With Pen and Ink" is a cartoon feature which concludes the above altogether satisfactory reel.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Blaze Away"
(Pathe—One Reel)

FROM a book published by "The Cactus Publishing Company," the comedian Paul Parrott, in the role of one who would be a cowboy, learns that one must really have experience to become versatile in the matter of properly handling firearms. The action, therefore, indicates what happens to a young tenderfoot who is made a deputy sheriff somewhere in the toughest locality of the Bad Lands. To those who enjoy a burlesque on the happenings related about dwellers in western territories will find the reel one aimed at provoking laughs.—LILLIAN GALE.

Witwer Aids Director on F. B. O. Series

PRODUCTION will start at once on the third of the "Fighting Blood" series, which are being released through the Film Booking Offices of America. The author of these stories, H. C. Witwer, is in daily consultation with the director, Mal St. Clair and it is said that the author's suggestions in regard to plot development and characterizations have proved invaluable in the production of the first two pictures, "Fighting Blood," from which the entire series takes its name, and "The Knight in Gale," which have been completed.

The third, upon which Mr. Witwer will also confer, will be another of the stories of American youth, showing the rise of the young hero to the heights of success in the prize ring. George O'Hara, as "Gale Galen," and Clara Horton as "Judy Wilcox" will have the leading roles in the series.

Fox Educational Valued by Educators

That Fox Educational Entertainments are proving a boon to educators as well as to exhibitors, is evidenced by the statement of a prominent official of a recent convention of teachers on St. Louis,

"I am thoroughly convinced that motion pictures will revolutionize methods of teaching, particularly such subjects as history, geography, biology and botany," said this official who is also principal of a big public school in St. Louis.

"Fox Educational Entertainments are a wonderful aid in vitalizing otherwise dry and uninteresting facts and data for plastic but truant young mind. Whenever a theatre in the neighborhood of my school is running a Fox Educational Entertainment, I make it a point to advise the children and their parents of the fact, and I know of other teachers and principals of schools who are doing likewise. I will say that this exhibitor has cooperated with me to the fullest extent, for he realizes that on such

To this end it has signed Herman Howard Matteson, prolific short story writer, as "Editor-in-Chief."

New Short Reel Offerings Ready

Hodkinson Announces First of Bray Romances for December 10

THE new Bray Romances, twenty-six of which will be released through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, beginning December 10, constitute a form of short reel feature which promise to enjoy popularity.

Beginning with "The Mystery Box," the story of radio in its closest relation to the average citizen, and concluding with a prophecy of future communication with an outside planet, the method of presentation embraces regular motion picture photography and instructive animated drawings.

The "radio bug," the depredations of which are supposed to have spread the radio fever everywhere, appears as a creation of the animated cartoon. He operates on a live actor, a boy of the susceptible age of twelve, with amusing, quick and positive results. In due course the boy has his coveted radio outfit in operation, and then scenes in broadcasting stations are introduced. Every one of the 4,000 exclusive dealers in radio equipment, and all their clerks; the personnel of every one of the 500 licensed broadcasting stations; the thousands of employes of the 700 manufacturers of radio sets who have a credit rating, and others who are also helping to supply the demands of the radio craze, will want to see it.

Director J. A. Norling's comic creation, the "radio bug," will be found as useful for advertising purposes as he is at creating amusement in the theatre. "The Mystery Box," especially when informed that this picture not only provides entertainment, but as well, tells all about radio in a way that everybody can fully understand, bids for wide distribution.

"Gambling with the Gulf Stream," has been announced as the third of the series.

During the past month the daily newspapers and technical magazines have been publishing numerous articles on the question of the change in the course of the Gulf Stream, responsible for the change in the current which will in time, according to eminent scientists, change the temperature of England and France to that of Labrador, affecting the shores of the United States in just the reverse manner.

This film shows the method that would have to be used to divert the Labrador Current.

Sultan's Birthday Feast Shown

Fox Cameraman Shoots Scene Just Before Flight From Constantinople

ONE of the most interesting news events of the year, the birthday feast of the Sultan of Turkey, which was held only a few minutes before he fled from Constantinople, is featured in the current issue of Fox News, according to announcement by Fox Film Corporation.

These pictures, which depict the beginning of the overthrow of the Mohammed VI. government, were taken by Frederick Fesneau, who recently obtained exclusive views of the new Turkish dictator, Kemal, for Fox News.

The latest interesting pictures from Turkey show the Sultan and his staff arriving at the palace in Constantinople, which occurred at the same time the members of the Nationalist party were plotting the downfall of his government. The soldiers on guard around the castle, a number of Turkish dignitaries who attended the birthday feast, interesting closeups of the Sultan, children eating cones of food given them from the Sultan's table, and other unusual scenes, are included in the subject.

The end of the subject shows the Sultan and the staff leaving the building, perhaps for the last time, for it was only a few minutes later that he received word from Angora that the nationalist assembly had adopted a resolution, submitted by Mustapha Kemal Pasha, to place the Sultan and his ministers on trial.

The Sultan fled aboard a British battleship bound for Malta, according to Associated Press dispatches. The fact that the Sultan fled aboard a British battleship was the cause of one of the gravest crises encountered during the Turkish troubles, and for this reason more than usual importance is attached to the news pictures obtained by the Fox news cameraman.

The Turkish Nationalists consider that the Sultan, by his flight, has surrendered the Caliphate, according to Rafet Pasha, Kemalist Governor of Constantinople, who says that according to the Moslem law, when the Sultan leaves Turkish soil and enters Christian territory he places himself under Christian protection and thereby ceases to retain any authority over the Moslems.

Turkish frontier. Owing to the unprecedented amount of newspaper space which has been devoted to the story of the Sultan's escape from Constantinople, the novel pictures in Fox News are certain to create unusual interest.

Baby Peggy Recovering From Serious Illness

The report that Baby Peggy is recovering from serious illness, while not yet strong enough to go back to work, comes as welcome news to admirers of the child actress, whose parents received letters and telegrams from all arts of the world in regard to Peggy's condition. The reported loss to the Goulding Company, through Peggy's illness, including overhead, salaries and incidental expenditures, amounted to about seven thousand dollars.

However, Peggy approves of the next picture chosen for her, which will be called "Grandma's Girl," and will have a featured cast for which one member has already been chosen, Jimmy Kelly, veteran of old men parts.

"The Senorita," the picture which was in production when Baby Peggy was taken ill, was complete, so far as the youthful star's part was concerned. In the cast were Max Asher, Joe Moore, Jack Cooper, Joe Bonner, Gus Leonard, Inez McDonnell, Tad Ross, Ena Gregory and John Ralesco, who completed the picture.

Al Christie Talks on Comedies

Believes Highbrow Comedies of Educational Nature Will Prevail in Future

THE fact that Al Christie has increased the business of the Christie Comedy plant 75 per cent in the last year, despite the so-called depressions only goes to show that what he has to say about the future of the comedy photoplays is worth listening to.

Mr. Christie has long ago abandoned the bathing beauty idea and thrown the custard pies in the ash can, for keeps, he says. He never has been an advocate of slapstick comedies. His type of production has been and is what might be classed as "highbrow comedies."

"People like to see pictures that are not exaggerated—humorous situations that could happen to you or me. They want to see people on the screen as they are in real life.

"The comedies of yesterday, with the funny mustaches and makeups haven't the appeal they had because you don't see that kind of people in life. They only appear in cartoons and caricatures. True, they were funny, but after you see them you question the reason for all the foolishness. They don't stick with you. There isn't any reason for the stories.

"The comedies of today and of the future must educate. They must leave an impression that will be lasting. For instance, my next comedy is laid in a shirtwaist factory. We will show 40 machines turning out a real product and operated by girls who are experienced. You will see shirtwaists made in a regular factory workroom. We have secured accurate data from every factory that makes the product in town. In the picture we will show you something that is worth knowing while you are being entertained. That will constitute the picture of the future.

"I believe that burlesquing the important and popular photodramas of the day is something that appeals to the picture going public. Take 'Cold Feet,' for instance, a burlesque on mounted police subjects. The comedy went over big. In it we obtained some beautiful effects and showed some scenery that did not hurt the eye to look at. We took a company of twenty-five people on a 1500-mile railroad ride to get what we wanted. Other comedies that we have made along the same lines have been successes. Each has carried a certain amount of scenic value that is good to know about."

"Our Gang" Leads Pathe List

Ten Subjects of Wide Variety Are Scheduled For Release December 3

ANOTHER funny Our Gang two-reel comedy, called "Saturday Morning," leads Pathe's list of ten subjects released on December 3, which includes Pathe News Nos. 98 and 99 and Topics of the Day No. 49.

"Saturday Morning" shows the kiddie and animal Our Gang favorites in their most irrepressible mood. No "plot" is needed, and there isn't any—just natural "animal spirits" with more than the usual consequences. "Speed," Pathe serial with Charles Hutchison, reaches its seventh episode—"Jaws of Danger."

In the Hal Roach one-reel comedy, "Blaze Away," Paul Parrott has been converted by the "Cactus Publishing Company's helpful hints to beginners" in twenty minutes into a cowboy of twenty years' experience.

Aesop's Film Fables series in animated cartoons is represented by "Friday, the 13th," in which Farmer Al Falfa is effectually cured of his habitual optimism.

Pathe Review No. 184 presents a film interpretation of verses from the famous poem of Longfellow entitled "Sunrise on the Hills." "A Nation in the Dawning" pictures the land and people of the new Republic of Latvia. There are chemical demonstrations showing the nature of air, and the White City and oasis of Gafsa, in Pathe color.

Screen Snapshots No. 14 presents picture celebrities with effective disregard of ceremony.

Fox Aeroplane Carriers Deliver Prints

FOX FILM CORPORATION, Ltd., of Australasia has launched a unique exploitation campaign by which its pictures, specials as well as short subjects, will be distributed to ehibitors throughout the Commonwealth by aeroplane carriers.

Captain Tracey and Lieut. Butler of the Australian Aircraft Forces, two airmen who particularly distinguished themselves in France during the World War, have been engaged to distribute Fox productions and conduct a special advertising campaign in New South Wales in the interests of the exhibitors.

Aside from the fact that the films are delivered to the exhibitors much more quickly than by the ordinary means, the publicity obtained for Fox pictures alone is very big.

Third Burr All Star Comedy Ready Soon

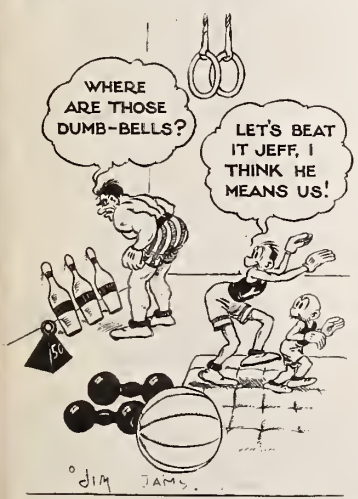
The third of a series of "All Star" comedies being produced by C. C. Burr, under the direction of Gregory La Cava, is said to be the most pretentious to date. Aside from Mary Anderson, Charlie Murray and Raymond McKee, who are the featured players in this series, the latest two-reeler also includes in its cast, Flora Finch.

According to the story the characters portrayed by Flora Finch and Charles Murray, become wealthy over night and their attempts to break into society furnishes a foundation for the amusing incidents which follow. Raymond McKee assumes the role of a newspaper reporter who unearths the machinations of a bogus count, played by Mathew Betts, intent upon winning the hand of a young debutante characterized by Mary Anderson.

The principals are supported by a number of known players, including Georgie Russell, while in keeping with the calibre of the cast, the sets for this comedy are said to be unusually lavish.

Ed Wynard, camera man for Norma Talmadge for three years, and later of the Fox productions, is camera executive.



A caption is scarcely necessary on this scene from a William Fox Mut and Jeff animated cartoon, so well known are these characters

Fox Has Varied Holiday Releases

Great List of One and Two Reelers Should Provide Good Entertainment

THE greatest and most varied list of one and two reel entertainments ever offered by Fox Film Corporation have been scheduled for release during the Holidays, according to an announcement issued this week.

Heading the list is Clyde Cook in "The Cyclist," heralded as the fun maker's most riotous laugh provoker. Few of the feature length comedies published during the past year rival this short length production for continuous comedy and hilarious fun, according to the opinions of those who have seen it. "The Cyclist," will be released Dec 24.

Al St. John's Christmas offering will be "The Alarm," which has just been completed at the Fox West coast studios. It is announced as something entirely new in the way of comedy entertainment and promises to give Al St. John unusual opportunities to display his versatility as a pantomime artist of the first magnitude.

"My Hero," will be the last of Lupino Lane's comedy productions to be released during the current year. This is Lane's third photo-drama for William Fox and if the hundreds of reports received from exhibitors throughout the United States can be taken as a criterion he has gained in popularity with each succeeding release. His other two releases were "The Pirate," and "The Reporter."

"Jim Jams," will be the Christmas offering of "Mutt and Jeff," Bud Fisher's celebrated cartoon characters which are presented in animated form by William Fox.

"A Poor Fish," will be the Holiday feature of the William Fox Sunshine Comedies, it is announced. This series of fun makers, which feature in addition to some of the best known pantomime artists on the screen, is winning new popularity with exhibitors and the public alike, according to all reports.

The comedy productions which have been mentioned above are in addition to the Fox Educational Entertainments, the second series of which will be available for exhibitors during the Holidays. The second series includes "Old Spain," "Pekin Ducks," "Bits of Europe," "Camphor," "Bird Life," and "The Runaway Dog." The first series of these subjects, which run from one half to one reel each, was released the latter part of September.

Moscow Trial Covered in Pathe News No. 93

One of the world's significant political events is a notable feature of the current issue of Pathe News No. 93. These pictures show the opening of the trial of 114 Russian social revolutionists at Moscow charged with attacks on the Soviet Government. Special interest attaches to this trial throughout the world because it represents efforts on the part of a revolutionary government to proceed against counter-revolutionists in the same orderly manner which characterizes governments long and firmly established.

The pictures show public demonstrations against the prisoners which continued for days before the trial opened, and which included ridicule by the crowds of effigies of lawyers for the defense; the House of Unions—formerly the "Hall of Nobles"—in Moscow, the scene of the trial; the prisoners arriving for the first session, some of them carrying food with them. Within the court chamber the tribunal, consisting of three judges including President Piatokeb, is shown; also the scene in the court room when the indictment is read. The spectacle of the numerous prisoners ranged at the bar to make their pleas completes the report of the first session of the trial.

Production-Distribution Activities

Standing is Star in Playgoers Release

WYNDHAM STANDING is the star of a five part drama which Playgoers Pictures announces for release December 3rd. With him is a supporting cast which is said to be of especial merit, with Dorothy Mackaill, who played opposite him in Playgoers' "The Isle of Doubt," impersonating the principal woman figure.

It is the story of a young college professor, regarded by the world in general and his immediate family in particular as weak and flabby, who figures in a remarkable case of spine development, once a real showdown comes.

It is down in the rugged mountain country that the unfoldment comes. The professor proceeds to fall in love with Sally Wolf, a diamond in the rough, and the first glimpses of his potential manliness are afforded when he sees the necessity of protecting her against the advances of a too insistent mountaineer.

He discovers, too, that his father's mine, which was believed to be petering out, has appeared so only because it is being systematically robbed of ore by an organized band of crooks. He obtains permission to operate the mine for a year, and in his new position he is able to ferret out the robbers and bring them to bay.

Nebraska Paper Praises "Trifling Women"

"A marvelous piece of work, the kind that for years to come will stand as a monument of what is possible in pictures * * *" So runs part of the laudatory review accorded the Rex Ingram production, "Trifling Women," which appeared in the Daily Independent of Grand Island, Nebraska.

This photoplay is a Rex Ingram production for Metro Pictures Corporation. It was written, adapted and directed by Mr. Ingram. The photography is the work of John F. Seitz.

First National Units Busy

Seven Producing Companies Scattered Over Globe in Preparation of Pictures

SEVEN producing companies, whose activities cover a scope of territory that ranges from California to Paris, France, are at present working or about to commence work on productions that are scheduled to be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Under the direction of Henry King, Richard Barthelmess has just completed "Fury" for early release. This picture deals largely with the sea around supposed seafaring centers of London and Glasgow. Thirty players spent three weeks with Mr. Barthelmess on a four masted schooner off the Massachusetts coast taking the sea shots for the film. In addition to the star the cast of players included Dorothy Gish, Tyrone Power, Barry MacCollom, Harry Blakemore and Patterson Dial.

In the Latin quarter of Paris, Richard Walton Tully is directing atmospheric shots for "Trilby," which will follow "Omar the Tentmaker," as his contribution to the First National schedule.

Edwin Carew has begun cutting and assembling his first release for First National, still untitled, which was made around New York City, embracing scenes taken in such familiar landmarks as the Pennsylvania Station, the Brooklyn Bridge, lower east side tenements and "pawnshop row." James Rennie and Dorothy Mackaill have the leading roles. Other members of the cast are Anders Randolf and Helene Montrose.

Allen Holubar has just returned to California from Vancouver, B. C. and Montreal where he selected locations for "The White Frontier," which he will shortly start filming for First National. The story, a gripping melodrama of outdoor Canada by Jeffrey de Prend, gives ample scope for scenic effects and unusual snow shots. Dorothy Phillips will be starred.

Katherine MacDonald and her company, including Stuart Holmes, Orville Caldwell, Edith Lyle, Adele Farrington and other players, have just returned to Hollywood from location at Arrowhead Lake where many of California's famous resorts, including Coffee Dan's hostlery, were shot for incorporation in the star's next picture "The Scarlet Lily."

To Maurice Tourneur has fallen the unique task of hunting the San Francisco waterfronts for antique vessels, relics of the old mine hunting colonists, to use in connection with his forthcoming production "The Isle of Dead Ships."

Frank Lloyd has started for the east where he will shoot prison scenes at Auburn and Sing Sing, preparatory to the return of the Talmadges from Europe when the actual work on the picture involving the presence of the star, will be begun.

In addition to the features named additional units starring Jackie Coogan, and the regular Thomas H. Ince contributions are now being made for the First National schedule.

Burr Takes Over "Blind Justice"

Edward Sloman's Special Feature Is Presented by Strong Cast

C. C. BURR has taken over Edward Sloman's special feature titled "Blind Justice." Directed and personally supervised by Edward Sloman, and adapted for the screen by Hilda Hollis from the story as it appeared in Munsey's Magazine by Frank R. Adams, "Blind Justice" presents in its cast Milton Sills, Carmel Myers, Pat O'Malley, Jack Mower, Walter Long, Alec Frances, Eric Mayne, Charles Clary and Wilson Hummel.

With a plot that is said to be entirely out of the ordinary and enacted with rare skill by Milton Sills and the other principals, C. C. Burr believes that for sheer entertainment value, "Blind Justice" is comparable with any of the more notable pictures produced.

"Blind Justice" is a society crook story in which Milton Sills possesses a role that is said to give him great opportunity to show his histrionic ability. Carmel Myers is also reported to have taken advanced strides in this production. Commenting upon the obtainment of "Blind Justice," C. C. Burr stated: "After viewing this production, and realizing its great potential value from every angle. I decided to deviate from my usual policy to distribute pictures that were made only under my direct supervision."

Both of these recent releases are recommended for showing in every theatre in the South, in the letters received at the Atlanta branch of Metro from Mrs. B. M. Boykin, president of the Committee.

"Trifling Women" is the subject of the following laudatory letter:

"The Better Films Committee of Atlanta heartily recommends the picture, 'Trifling Women.' The cast and stage setting is particularly good and we can give our endorsement to same as being an A number one picture to be shown in every theatre in the South."

An equally praiseworthy endorsement is given "The Forgotten Law" in the following note:

"It is with great pleasure that the Better Films Committee of Atlanta is able to recommend 'The Forgotten Law' as a very good picture, and one that should be shown in every theatre in the South. The characters are very good and the little child is exceptionally interesting and clever."

"Temptation" Third of C. B. C. Series

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announces this week that "Temptation" has been chosen as the third feature on the series, and that, unlike its predecessors, "More To Be Pitied" and "Only a Shopgirl," which are picturizations of Charles E. Final production plans will be complete within the week, it is announced, after which Director LeSaint will return to the West Coast to start actual production.

Pathe Contest Assures Big Business

A FRESH indication of this season's big business prospects is seen by Pathe in the auspicious start recorded for the Eschmann Sales Contest, which opened at midnight on November 4 and will close at midnight December 30.

As a result of the first week of this competition between branch exchange forces more Pathe product of all types is said to have been booked, and new accounts opened, than during the same period of time in the course of any preceding contest. As the more liberal prizes offered than figured as an incentive in former sales contests cannot reasonably account for the largely increased results obtained at the start, the explanation of settled optimism on the part of exhibitors is accepted by Pathe as the only logical one.

L. A. City Mothers Laud "Knighthood"

That "When Knighthood Was in Flower," the Cosmopolitan picture starring Marion Davies, is educational as well as splendidly entertaining, alike to young and old is the verdict of the City Mothers' Association of Los Angeles. This important and influential organization has sent a letter to Sid Grauman, owner of the Rialto Theatre in Los Angelcs where the picture is now showing, commending him for bringing such a wonderful picture to Los Angeles. The letter reads:

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" is so truly depicted that it brings to us most vividly the deep debt of gratitude that woman owes to the freedom of democracy.

"It is not only educational, but every movement holds one in thrilling expectancy and would be interesting to both young and old alike."

Leah Baird Picture Cast Announced

Arthur F. Beck sent from Culver City this week a full list of the players in "When Civilization Failed," the production featuring Leah Baird, lately finished for Associatcd Exhibitors. It includes: Bobby Bolder, Tom Santschi, Walter McGrail, Richard Tucker, and Alec Francis.

Warner Scores "Sand Bagging"

Finds Exhibitors Complaining Over Methods Employed in Selling Pictures

THE plaint of exhibitors that sand bagging methods are being used to sell film will not be tolcrated by the Warner Brothers, according to a statement made by Harry M. Warner upon his return from a four weeks trip to the west coast studios. Mr. Warner also declared that the studio has been enlarged in order to adequately hold sevcral producing companies which are scheduled to begin work on eighteen productions for next scason.

"On my way back from the west coast," said Mr. Warner, "I stopped in a number of the big cities to gain some first hand information about exhibitor conditions. I discovered that exhibitors were complaining bitterly of the methods being used by a number of organizations in the industry to sell them pictures.

"The complaint is that these organizations are trying to sand bag exhibitors. By that I mean that an exhibitor cannot purchase pictures on an individual basis, but must take a group of mediocre product in order to secure one good box-officc attraction.

"As far as the Warner Brothers are concerned no such method will be pursued in the distribution of their present and future productions. We believc that exhibitors are entitled to choose for themselves what pictures are best suited for their audiences, and we will aid them in every way possible to derive the maximum box-office results with each and every onc of our productions."

According to Mr. Warner the west coast studios were enlarged at a cost of $200,000. Four and a half acres adjoining the studio were taken over, giving thc Warner studios a total of over nine acres of ground. Construction of the administration office, dressing rooms and various other offices, is reportcd under way.

"The acquisition of this property," added Mr. Warner, "was necessitated by our enlarged plans for next season. We plan to produce eighteen pictures, and we have already negotiated for the majority of the stories we will produce. They will be adaptations of only well known books and plays such as the seven productions we are producing this year."

The seven productions include "Rags to Riches," and "Little Heroes of the Street," both featuring Wesley Barry, "The Beautiful and Damned," with Marie Prevost, "Little Church Around the Corner," "A Dangerous Adventure," "Brass," and "Main Street."

"Way Down South" Completed

Final Shots Made and Assembling and Cutting Get Under Way Next Week

FINAL shots on "Way Down South," thc drama of the Southland, fro which Murray W. Garsson was said to have paid $25,000 for the motion picture rights, were being made this week. Cutting and assembling of the production which has becn several months in the making, will be begun next week.

For a month the company, which includes such well known players as Marian Swayne, Joe King, Jack Richardson—and in the supporting cast, Isabelle Fisher, Norma Lee, W. F. Chaplin, Melville Shyer, John Jenkins, Francis Grant and Irene Boyle—was on location in the historic town of Albany, Ga., where much of the action of the story is laid.

Mr. Garsson was insistent that thc actual locale of this absorbing drama be used in the production. As a result, it is said the fidelity with which the story is presented in the screen version will greatly enhancc the genuine dramatic appeal which is present throughout.

Of particular note will be the great race track scenes in which a score of real thoroughbreds, imported from Southern race meets, were employed. One of the most remarkable scenes a cameraman has ever had the fortune to snap is that of a fall of one of the horses right before the thundering hoofs of a half dozen others. The horse, though it turned over and over, escaped uninjured. The jockey employed was severely shaken up.

This scene was absolutely neccssary to the story.

Harrison Ford Opposite Helen Jerome Eddy

Helen Jerome Eddy will have the advantage of having Harrison Ford in her first starring vehicle, "Whcn Love Comes." Mr. Ford plays the part of a young engineer who comes to the sleepy New England town with plans for its expansion.

"When Love Comes" is a Ray Carroll production soon to be relcased through the Film Booking Offices of Amcrica.

Society Audiences Greet "Knighthood"

RIVALING in brilliancy a first night gathering at the opera are the audiences which are turning out in all the big cities of the country where the now famous Cosmopolitan picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," is opening. Limousines gliding up to the theatre doors; rustle of silks and satins, gleam of jewels; all the animated, friendly conversation which one always associates with a big social event—these have been the fitting accompaniments to the opening of the picture in such cities as Los Angeles, Washington, Boston and Atlanta.

The flower of southern aristocracy graced the boxes of the Rialto Theatre in Atlanta, Georgia, on the opening night there. The names of prominent society people who attended took up space in the daily papers almost a column long the next day.

Georgia Editor Praises George Arliss

Characterizing George Arliss as "one of the foremost actors and impersonators of the day," and declaring that the latest Arliss photoplay, a Distinctive Pictures feature released by United Artists Corporation, "is something way above the average" and "a picture that will appeal to everybody," the editor of the Savannah Press wrote a lengthy editorial on Mr. Arliss and his picture on the occasion of the engagement at the Arcadia theatre, Savannah.

It follows in part:

"So many people attend moving pictures and the influence of this form of entertainment is so great that this must be our excuse for speaking of the delightful representation of George Arliss at the Arcadia theatre. Arliss is one of the foremost actors and impersonators of the day. Everything that he is identified with on the screen or stage is so clean and wholesome. So the beautiful representation of 'The Man Who Played God' this week left an impression."

Cameo Retains "When the Desert Calls"

Seiter, was completed by Sam and Jack Warner, and Harry Rapf put the finishing touches to the Charles G. Norris novel, "Brass," directed by Sidney Franklin.

In the "Little Church Around the Corner" cast are Kenneth Harlan, Claire Windsor, Hobart Bosworth, Pauline Stark, Cyril Chadwick, Marguerite Seddon, Walter Long, Alec Francis and Winter Hall. The story and scenario were written by Olga Printzlau based on the stage play of the same name by Marion Russell.

"Brass," was adapted by Julian Josephson. Prominent members of the cast include Marie Prevost, Monte Blue, Frank Keenan, Harry Meyers, Helen Ferguson, Irene Rich, Pat O'Malley, Margaret Seddon, Edward Jobson and Miss Du Pont.

"Sure-Fire Flint" Gets First Run Bookings

Close on the heels of the first run showings of "Sure-Fire Flint" at Gordon's Olympia Theatre in Boston and at Stanley's Victoria Theatre in Philadelphia, comes the announcement that Johhny Hines' latest has also been booked day and date at the Chicago, Riviera and Tivoli Theatres in Chicago; at the State Theatre in Minneapolis; at the Capital Theatre in St. Louis, and the Rialto Theatre in Denver.

These first run bookings will all run an entire week at each of the above mentioned first-run houses.

According to advices received at the Mastodon Film offices, "Sure-Fire Flint" has been acceptably received by enthusiastic audiences wherever it has been shown. Producer Burr has been forced to order another additional lot of prints to satisfy the requests of the exchanges that have bought "Sure-Fire Flint" for their respective territories.

Metro Claims Vast Production

Typical New England Village Is Built to Portray "Quincy Adams Sawyer"

AN indication of the tremendous scale on which the photoplay "Quincy Adams Sawyer" was produced, is contained in the information just made public by Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of this Metro-SL (Sawyer-Lubin) Special production.

In order to represent faithfully the locale of the story, a typical New England town was erected at the Metro studios in Hollywood; to portray its famous people, fourteen players were chosen, each of whom has an established reputation as an expert character delineator; and for the actual translation to the screen of the novel, an exceptionally well suited director was engaged to follow a scenario prepared by a craftsman skilled in the art of adaptation.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" is among the famous novels of rural life. Its characters are known to all who profess any familiarity with American literature.

In order to preserve fully the rural character of the story, it was necessary that a director be selected whose training and personal experience were such as to render him suited for so great a task. In Clarence G. Badger, director of established skill, such a man was found. His work in making the series of photoplays starring Will Rogers was so successful, that it was felt that for the type of story in question, no better choice could be made.

The task of preparing the screen adaptation was placed in the hands of Bernard McConville, who has to his credit many of the leading screen successes of the past few years.

There are many roles in "Quincy Adams Sawyer," each of them a well-defined, clear-cut characterization, calling for a skilled player to interpret it.

To enact the role of Alice Pettingill, the blind girl, Blanche Sweet was brought back to the screen after her retirement of more than two years.

Lon Chaney was obtained to play the role of the Czar of Mason's Corner, Obadiah Strout.

Barbara La Marr, the most promising of the young screen celebrities now in the public eye, was cast in the role of Lindy Putnam, "the sauciest girl in Mason's Corner."

For the title role of Quincy, John Bowers was engaged. This leading man is a magnetic screen personality, sure in his results and deft in his characterization.

Louise Fazenda, noted for her eccentric comedy characterizations, is seen as Mandy Skinner.

These are but a few of the remarkable cast. In addition there is Elmo Lincoln, June Elvidge, Gale Henry, Hank Mann, Edward Connelly, Claire McDowell, Joseph Dowling, Victor Potel, Billy Franey, Kate Lester and Millie Davenport.

Travesty on "Robin Hood" For Montana

Bull Montana, who appears in the travesty on "Robin Hood," titled "Rob 'Em Good," is said by Metro, to be surrounded with a strong supporting cast, among whom are male players all weighing in the neighborhood of 200 pounds. These thrust their pugnacious jaws toward the camera and appear delightful profile photographs of flattened noses and cauliflower ears.

In this Hunt Stromberg production for Metro, Bull Montana of course, plays the Earl of Huntingdon and Robin Hood. Chuck Reisner, who had a leading role in Bull's earlier picture, "A Ladies' Man," portrays the role of King Richard. Others in the cast include Dot Farley as Lady Marion, Sidney D'Albrook as Sir Guy Gisbourne, James Quinn as Prince John, Billy Elmer as Little John and Spike Robinson and Vincent Bryant as Prince John's henchmen. Among the ladies of the court are Charlotte Woods, Betty Allen, Evelyn Pierce, Peggy Jardon, and Glade Davis. The picture, from a continuity by Clyde Bruckman, also includes a large number of people cast as castle guards, flower girls, crusaders and soldiers.

First Adams Production Prints Arrive

First prints of the initial Frank R. Adams production, "The Super-Sex," have arrived from Los Angeles at the home offices of American Releasing Corporation, distributors of the picture.

Picturized and directed by Lambert Hillyer, "The Super-Sex" is said to be an uncommonly faithful translation to the screen of Adams' story, "Miles Brewster and The Super-Sex."

It is described as a comedy of small town life centering around the emotions and exploits of a 20-year old boy. This role is played by Robert Gordon, popular delineator of similar types, whose return to the screen finds him provided with a role as characteristic as his "Huckleberry Finn." Others in the cast are Tully Marshall, Charlotte Pierce, Gertrude Claire, Lydia Knott, Albert MacQuarrie and George Bunny. Photography is by John S. Stumar.

New Territories Sold On "Notoriety"

A HIGH - WATER mark for the sale of an independent picture was claimed this week when Sam Sax, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North reported that four exchanges had bought territorial rights on the Will Nigh photodrama, "Notoriety," and the coming three Will Nigh features to be released this year.

The buyers are Howard Mann, of the Equitable Pictures Corp. of Baltimore, Md., who signed for the Nigh series for the states of Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, and the District of Columbia; Dave Mundstuck, of the Exclusive Film Co., Detroit, who bought "Notoriety" and the Nigh series for the state of Michigan; Lee Goldberg, of the Big Feature Rights Corp., Louisville, Ky., who bought the series for Kentucky and Tennessee and the Midwest Distributing Co., Milwaukee, Wis., buyers of the Night productions for Wisconsin and the Upper Peninsula.

Fay Tincher in Sargent Comedy

Fay Tincher is now with Universal.

The "stripes girl," of a few years ago, was well known as a comedy star, retired from screen work two years ago. However, she has returned to the screen and will appear opposite Lewis Sargent in a "messenger boy" comedy, now being made at Universal City.

These comedies, starring Lewis Sargent, are described by Universal as those worthy of the best casts that can be found in support of the newcomer in the comedy field. Under the direction of Scott Darling, the current comedy nears completion.

"Back Home and Broke" Ready for Editing

Final scenes for Thomas Meighan's Paramount picture, "Back Home and Broke," by George Ade, have been filmed at the Paramount Long Island studio and the picture is now ready for editing and cutting. Mr. Ade is expected at the studio soon to help write the titles for his story.

"No Luck" Hamilton Comedy Has Big Cast

LLOYD HAMILTON may boast of one of the largest and best casts he has ever used in the making of the third of his new series for Educational, under the title of "No Luck."

In the comedian's support is Ruth Hiatt, who appeared, also, in his comedies "The Speeder" and "The Educator," while two of the best known "kiddies" in motion pictures, Coy Watson, Jr., and Bobbie DeVilbiss, contribute their shares to the fun.

Lloyd Bacon, son of the late Frank Bacon, is also in the cast, which includes Tom Kennedy and Tom McGuire. Kennedy has played the villain in a number of comedy and dramatic productions, and was formerly an amateur heavy-weight champion boxer of the United States. He was the villain in "The Speeder." Tom McGuire, also, is an actor of long stage and screen experience.

Students Write Opinions of "Knighthood"

Two hundred and fifty students were chosen from the English classes at Marquette University in Milwaukee to view the Cosmopolitan picture "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies and then write their opinions of it.

The students were assigned to the production because of the immense impression it has created all over the country and because of the unlimited opportunity it affords for describing costuming, properties, scenery, etc.

The variety of scenes and the accuracy with which the life of the Tudor period is depicted are other features which prompted the instructors to avail themselves of the opporunity for their classes.

F. B. O. Sends Out Novelty Booklet

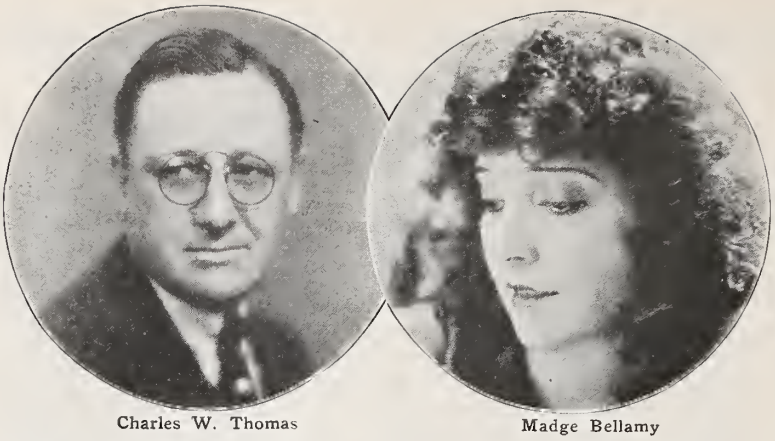
The advertising department of the Film Booking Offices of America has issued an attractive twenty-page catalogue and booking guide which lists all its relcases and gives a breif description of each. These are being sent out to exhibitors from F. B. O. exchanges with a special offer of 10 percent discount for cash on any group of pictures booked therefrom.



Charles W. Thomas — Madge Bellamy

Madge Bellamy Associated Star

Contract Consummated for Series of Pictures to Be Made by Regal Company

STRAIGHT from her triumph in "Lorna Doone," Maurice Tournneur's production, in which she is featured by Thomas H. Ince, with fresh laurels assured on the early release, also through First National, of another big Ince production, "The Hottentot," in which she and Douglas MacLean are the outstanding figures, Madge Bellamy has just entered the galaxy of Associated Exhibitors' stars.

Announcement of this alliance was made by Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated, immediately upon his return to New York from the west coast. The contract for the distribution by Associated of a series of features starring Miss Bellamy was signed just before Mr. Kane left Los Angeles, and followed conferences of the exccutive with the popular player and her business associates.

Coming just after the announcement of the tieup between Douglas MacLean and Associated Exhibitors, the news of this affiliation undoubtedly will give rise to increased speculation respecting the identity of other stars whom Mr. Kane may have brought into the Associated fold.

Regal Pictures, Inc., is the new organization which will make the Madge Bellamy features with Clark W. Thomas in charge. Promise is given that the name of the first on the list will be divulged soon, and that production work will be under way shortly.

Kyne Picture Is Highly Praised

"Brothers Under the Skin" Is Warmly Commended by New York Reviewers

SELDOM does a motion picture receive such flattering reviews at the hands of the New York reviewers of films as they accorded Goldwyn's adaptation of a Peter B. Kyne story "Brothers Under the Skin," acted by Helene Chadwick, Claire Windsor, Mae Busch, Pat O'Malley and Norman Kerry. It was the offering at the Capitol theatre last week.

James Spearing in the New York Times wrote: "The overflowing thanks of a grateful reviewer, and it is hoped many others, are extended to E. Mason Hopper and those responsible with him for the treatment given 'Brothers Under the Skin.' They have told a merry, careless story."

Quinn Martin in The World: "This is an exceedingly funny treatment of the extravagant wife problem. E. Mason Hopper, who directed it, is a man with a keen sense of comedy possibilities. He decided to take this script and tickle his audiences into seeing the moral of his yarn rather than to preach them into seeing it."

Alan Dale in the New York American wrote: "A Film of truth, and clever. Oh, it handed me a fine, fat laugh. A sort of Petruchio and Katherine with Katherine made the goat."

P. W. Gallico in the Daily News: "Bringing friend wife to this picture is just as mild a sport as waving a red rag at a bull. For once the male is glorified, and how we like it! . . . This delightful picture."

Landon M. Robinson in the Globe: "The picture is exceptional of its variety chiefly because of its rich humor and the fact that it is rather a faithful reflection of life."

Ben F. Holzman in the Mail: "What a wonderful relief it is to find a picture directed by a man with a sense of humor.

"One and all should bow in thanks!"

Evening World: "It's as funny a film conceit as we have beheld for a long, long time."

Telegram: "Is going to give all the gentler sex at the matinees a good deal to talk about. The sterner sex will find much in it to arrest their attention. Here is a story of the day, with present day problems in matrimony resolved to a satisfactory conclusion."

Journal: "What appeared to appeal most to the spectators of both sexes was its amusing insight into the lives of their neighbors' families. It is a double-barrelled plot."

Cast Is Selected for "Alice Adams"

Florence Vidor's expressed determination to picturize Booth Tarkington's prize winning novel, "Alice Adams" exactly as it was written is emphasized in the selection of players for her cast and their assignment to the various characterizations in the story.

Miss Vidor will, of course, have the title role. No less distinguished an actor than Claude Gillingwater has been secured to play Virgil Adams, Alice's easy-going, easily influenced father.

Margaret McWade will impersonate the mother. Harry Goodwin will play the part of Walter, the son. Vernon Steel will portray John Russell, who was attracted to Alice until the gossips' tongues wagged too busily. Thomas Ricketts will be seen as J. A. Lamb, the town's industrial king.

Oscar Lund Now on His Ninety-Fourth Film

Experience in the making of ninety-three pictures, including a score of successes going back through "The Dollar Mark" and also a long list of one and two reelers that made early screen history, is responsible for the audience appeal of "Love's Old Sweet Song," recently completed by Oscar Lund, according to Hopp Hadley who is handling the new subject. He says: "'Love's Old Sweet Song' is an audience picture from start to finish. He has included everything in the Director's Encyclopedia in six fast moving reels. Four different kinds of love-interest, three unusual fight scenes, an explosion and train race with death, not to mention laughs and pathos plus a clever child and an appealing song element. Now he is starring on his ninety-fourth picture and he is still in his thirties."

Christie Comedies for Holiday Season

Christie Comedies announce a wide variety of subjects for the current and coming holiday season, featuring such of their star players as Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Dorothy Devore and others in the supporting casts. In determining the present schedule of films released through Educational Film Exchanges, the Christie organization has centered primarily on variety in subjects issued with the idea of delving into new types of comedy for their labors.

Such pictures are the November releases, "Choose Your Weapons," and Chop Suey," the former featuring Bobby Vernon, and the latter with Dorothy Devore. December releases will include "The Chased Bride," with Neal Burns, a story centered on the railroad, with a limited train chasing a hand-car and the like; and "In Dutch" with Bobby Vernon, in a lodge initiation story. Considerable interest is also aroused in "Hazel From Hollywood" which is now being produced, and which will be ready for release early in January.

Lighting for the Various Sections of the Theatre

Different Means Employed for Securing the Best Results

*By J. L. Stair

THE lighting of the auditorium has probably been given more attention recently than that of any other portion of the theatre. Recent practices in auditorium lighting have led to the more or less general adoption of the indirect lighting system as the logical method for this portion of the theatre, using variations as to color effects, as well as controllable graduations of the intensity of the light. The lighting may be accomplished by means of hanging fixtures, from cornices, coves, wall brackets, balcony rails, etc., depending upon the personal liking of the owner or the architectural influences of the interior.

It has come to be a necessity that at least two intensities of illumination be provided for the auditorium. First, a dim lighting during progress of the show, and a brighter intensity for intermissions. Dim lighting while the pictures are being shown assists the ushers in seating the patrons, produces a more cheerful place of entertainment and gives to the patrons a sense of safety and security. A dim illumination can be carefully calculated to be of such intensity as not to interfere in any way with the clearness of the picture on the screen, and furthermore not reduce the ability of clearly seeing about the room.

Dim and bright lighting effects are easily obtained by employing dimmers or by wiring lamps in the lighting units on separate circuits, controlled from the operator's box.

Intensity for Auditorium

In a careful investigation recently made by L. A. Jones, of the Research Laboratories of the Eastman Kodak Company, the following conclusions regarding intensities for auditoriums were arrived at:

The illuminations should vary on 1/10 ft. candle at the front of the theatre to 2/10 ft. candles at the rear while the pictures are being exhibited. With the intensity graduated as mentioned ordinary newspaper print can be read with ease by an observer. This amount of illumination will not decrease in any way the quality of the projected picture. However, in order to accomplish results that are satisfactory, the light must be properly distributed throughout the interior and all bright areas or points of intense light should be eliminated.

* Paper before Soc. Mot. Pict. Eng.

Fig. 7—Diagram showing proper gradation of illumination intensity from rear to front of house for dim lighting arrangement

Fig. 7 shows a sectional view of theatre and illustrates the method of theatre illumination based upon the findings of Mr. Jones. Mr. Jones states that to best accomplish the illumination values indicated above very extended effective light sources are required, such as illuminated ceilings and walls. These are produced most economically by use of the indirect system of lighting.

Color Effects

In addition to the requirements of the auditorium illumination color effects are coming to be more essential in the production of photoplays, in suiting to the lighting to the action and the atmosphere of the play. The theatre of the future will no doubt utilize harmonious lighting effects in the presentations. The means for doing this are now within the reach of exhibitors.

The present fashions in theatre lighting are no doubt giving the greatest impetus to the use of colored or tinted illumination and there exists a great opportunity in the playhouse for reaching and developing in the public an appreciation for color. The art of light will educate the average eye to gradations of color to which it is now blind.

There is every reason to believe that lighting can be made to change with the emotional changes of the play, melting one mood into another. For instance, for night scenes, illumination in the auditorium should be diminished to preserve the proper brightness ratio, and in the case of sun-set or sun-rise, the effect may be increased by a simultanous increase of the brightness in the auditorium.

Handicaps Present

Modern practice shows that colored lights are sometimes used entirely for auditorium lighting, with the white or untinted light entirely eliminated. In some cases a blue light is used for the dim illumination and in other instances amber tone is employed while the pictures are being shown.

We have been hadicapped more or less in the use of color lighting in the general illumination of the theatre, because of the mediums with which we have had to work. These mediums have in the past included colored fabrics, gelatine screens, dipped lamps and sheet glass, giving fairly satisfactory results. However, since the development of the high efficiency lamps, the heat factor has become very important and the color devices mentioned above will not entirely fill the requirements because of burning of the mediums. This condition

Perfect Inspection at Twice the Speed Now Possible in Film Exchanges

THE crying need of the industry, that of better inspection of films in the exchanges gives promise of being fulfilled through the invention of a remarkable apparatus. This machine, during the inspection of motion picture film, detects the slightest defect and does so with twice the speed that is now possible in the ordinary methods of inspection. A detailed report on this apparatus has been received from the office of the inventor and is as follows:

Sketch of film inspecting machine that permits twice the ordinary speed and much greater accuracy of inspection

The Vivader film inspecting machine is the invention of Dr. Maxwell Vidaver. The inventor spent two and one-half years in developing and perfecting this device. The Vidaver machine marks the dawn of a new era in the examination of film. Previous to the advent of this machine all film has been hand inspected. Not alone is the hand method costly but is extremely inefficient. Fifty per cent of the flaws in a film are never detected under the present system. The present method has been tolerated through necessity. Any other method of examination seemed impossible, and the old adage that "that which cannot be cured must be endured" applied here.

Each film that leaves an exchange must be hand examined. Every film is examined on an average of twice a week. On reaching the exhibitor it is run on an average of fifteen times before being returned to the exchange. During these runs it necessarily develops new breaks and flaws, and the many undetected breaks that were not remedied are enlarged. The first-class exhibitor has an inspector at the theatre to examine the film after each run. The purpose of this examination in the theatre is to eliminate the possibility of a white screen and a consequent diminution in the fire hazard. Most of the fires that occur in the motion picture house are due to undetected breaks. It is obvious that a rigid inspection of film by the Vidaver machine will not alone be of great material benefit to the exchange but will, if also examined in the motion picture house after each exhibition render the fire hazard almost nil, and prove a protection to the general public.

The Vidaver machine is entirely automatic and as fool proof as human ingenuity could make it. The method of operation is simple. The reel is placed on a spindle modeled after the one used in the hand method. It is threaded through the machine automatically and attached in the ordinary manner to the empty reel. The handle of the machine is lifted and the machine starts. The moment there is a break or flaw the machine stops. The operator eliminates the defect that the machine has detected and again pulls up the handle to start the machine. The machine examines a film in five minutes. Inside sprocket breaks, the very existence of which to the average examiner are practically unknown, are detected by the Vidaver machine with unfailing regularity. Open patches, enlarged or stretched sprocket holes that are never detected except by accident, are located by the machine with uncanny regularity.

Mr. Edwin S. Porter, president of the Precision Machine Co., Inc., who is regarded in the film world as an authority on cameras, projections, and all other motion picture machinery, says: "It seemed uncanny the way this machine ferreted out every little flaw, the majority of which would escape the inspectors in the laboratories and film exchanges. It is absolutely automatic, thereby eliminating the human element which enters into the present method of inspecting film. This machine is a combination of well known and tried movements which are of sound principle. It is a solid affair with very few parts to get out of order and practically fool proof. Its use would immediately effect a saving of fifty per cent upon inspection of film plus rigid inspection of film that is impossible to obtain with the present method."

The Vidaver machine will eliminate seventy-five per cent of the hand examiners. One operator with two machines can do the work of four examiners, and do the work one hundred per cent better. The saving to the exchanges and laboratories will be enormous. Added to this labor-saving cost is the saving in the cost of film replacement, which the Vidaver machine will tend to eliminate through increasing the life of the film.

The inventor, Dr. Maxwell Vidaver, has constructed seven different models. Each model being a step further. Each model has been tried out for weeks in an exchange, not under the paternal and forgiving eye of the inventor, but tested by his assistant, Mr. Jules Schwall, who has grown up in the film industry. The inventor felt that in submitting his machine to the tests of this nature, criticism would be free and candid and faults would not be glossed over. This method has resulted in a machine that is faultless.

Lighting for Various Sections of Theatre

of course brings about a loss in the character and efficiency of colored light.

Dipped and colored lamps are useful where the heat factor is not great, but they do not meet the requirements in all cases, especially where the maintenance is a large item, and replacements are expensive.

Because of the lack of stability in color effects and because of replacements in the medium, a new type of color slide of special heat resisting glass with the color incorporated in it has recently been developed, and seems to have solved many difficult problems for this class of installation.

With the proper application of these plates for the lighting of the auditorium and the stage, a more rapid advancement in the art of color in lighting is possible without the handicap of the fading out of the medium.

The following examples of auditorium lighting will be of interest as indicating the various methods that are being employed for producing the lighting results.

As a first example, Fig. 8 shows how the hanging lighting fixture is employed. In this theatre, four large luminous type indirect fixtures 72 inches in diameter furnish white and colored lighting effects. The color combinations are obtained by using special colored slides placed above the reflector units in the bowl. In this particular case the lamps for the color units burn in a horizontal position, thus concentrating the maximum of heat on the color slide. This condition brought about the necessity of securing a color medium that is practically permanent, not only as far as the color itself is concerned, but also one that would not crack with subjection to the high temperature.

Another interesting example of lighting with fixtures is to be found in the theatre illustrated in Fig. 9. The fixture shown is probably the largest indirect lighting fixture ever installed. This enormous unit is 15 ft. in diameter and contains 118 lamps. The main bowl has 100-200 watt lamps in special indirect lighting reflector. The lower bowl contains 18-60 watt lamps. This lower bowl serves to illuminate the large bowl and is also used for emergency lighting.

The large fixture is suspended by eight 2-inch pipes, 25 ft. long, and hangs in the center of the dome of the auditorium—weighs approximately 5,500 pounds, and is finished in ivory and gold. The auxiliary lighting by other portions of the theatre not affected by the central fixture is done by means of sixteen smaller fixtures similar to the large one.

Color lighting is also a feature of this installation. In the central fixture the 100-200 watt lamps are divided into four groups of 25 each, with red, amber, blue and white. The colors are secured by natural colored cover glasses, placed above the reflectors. The same scheme is carried out for the small fixtures. It might be mentioned in this connection that one of the interesting treatments of the lighting in this theatre is the flood-lighting of the proscenium arch by twelve 1,000-watt projector units.

In one of the theatre in Illinois all of the principal lighting of the auditorium with the exception of the under the balcony section, and for the proscenium arch, comes from a large crystal chandelier, as shown in Fig. 10. This fixture has a total capacity of about 16,350 watts, measures 9 ft. in diameter, and 17 ft. in height. The wiring is arranged in 18 circuits, and serves the many individual lighting units consistng of indirect reflecting devices, color attachments, and the lamps in the interior of the fixture body.

Crystal pieces are being employed in many of the modern theatres. It is therefore of interest to know how the modern crystal chandelier may be employed as an effective lighting fixture without robbing it of its artistic character. Fig. 11 shows the interior arrangements and will give an idea how the fixture without may be retained in all its beauty and yet have the added qualities of being light-giving and glareless. This fixture illustrates a radical departure in theatre lighting, and also shows what can be done in combining the artist's skill with practical illumination effects.

The general tendency in theatre lighting is to get away entirely from the use of hanging fixtures, employing methods of concealed lighting. Some of the most interesting and pleasing installations have been made without fixtures. For the theatre auditorium especially, the elimination of the hanging fixtures increases the spacious appearance of the interior, and also offers the least obstruction to the view of the patrons and to the projection of the pictures. One of the interesting examples of this form of lighting is illustrated in Fig. 12. The lighting equipment in this case is contained in the cornice near the ceiling on two sides of the room. Four series of lighting units are employed, one for white lighting, and one each of the colors, red, green and blue. Standard 200-watt Mazda lamps are used in silvered one-piece corrugated reflectors. Color screens of glass are mounted over the openings of lighting units.

A system of dimmers in the circuit of the lighting units provides an easy means by which the lighting units may be lighted so gradually that one is scracely aware of the increasing intensity. Then the colors of red, green, blue, and various combinations of these colors can be passed through to clear white lighting gradually receding to almost actual darkness, without a noticeable flicker.

Fig. 13 shows another example of the cove lighting method in which the reflecting devices and lamps are installed in coves at the base of the ceiling domes. In this theatre, the Tivoli of Chicago, the main dome contains a large number of 60-watt lamps on 8-inch centers with special mirrored reflectors. The smaller dome contains the same type of equipment with 50-watt lamps.

The finish of the ceiling of the domes is aluminum leaf and gives extremely pleasing lighting effects when the various colors are played upon it. Many special features are employed for other portions of the theatre, such as the side balustrade, under the balcony, the organ grills, the steps at the side of the stage, etc.

An interesting way in which lighting effects may be obtained from ornamental wall boxes is shown in Fig. 14. It will be noted that the side walls of the room are divided architecturally into panels which provide a pleasing arrangement for the lighting units. One wall box equipped with special reflectors is located in each of the panels. Each of the wall boxes contains three lighting units wired on two circuits. One unit provides the dim illumination during the performance, while all the units burning during the intermission give a bright illumination. In installations of this character, boxes should be located a sufficient distance from the ceiling to produce an even brightness over the ceiling area.

Concealed Lamps

By working the lighting units into the decorative elements of the room, all lamps are entirely hidden from view, yet the interior is illuminated by means of equipment which appears to be a decorative feature rather than a lighting fixture.

Another method which offers great possibilities in the lighting of theatre auditorium is illustrated in Fig. 15. This balcony view shows that considerable ingenuity has been used in concealing lamps and reflector equipment along the front of the balcony rail. To one seated in the balcony no lamps are visible and yet the auditorium is flooded with diffused illumination. When viewing the balcony from the stage it is not at once apparent that the projecting compartment has been added so well does it fit into the architectural treatment of the house.

Special Lighting Features

Many of the larger theatres are providing special arrangements whereby a flood of light can be concentrated upon the orchestra during the overtures and other special musical numbers. With the auditorium light subdued the orchestra is brought out in bold contrast to the surroundings tending to keep the attention of the audience upon the musical number. An example of an orchestra pit lighted in this manner is shown in Fig. 16. The methods for producing this concentration of light are various. Sometimes projectors are concealed above the ceiling, the light beams coming through an opening. When the orchestra pit is well back under the proscenium arch the units are placed among the borders.

In many theatres a feature is made of the lighting of the proscenium arch in order to bring out the beauty of the architectural treatment. A unique method recently installed is shown in Fig. 17. The units in this case were placed in the false boxes at either side of the arch. The location of the boxes can be seen by referring to Fig. 10. It will be noted that the supporting device for the reflector units in this case are adjustable, making it possible to point the reflected beam in any direction to secure the proper placing and distribution to the light from the units. Special heat-resisting colored cover plates are used above the reflectors, thus allowing for color effects to be played upon the arch in conjunction with corresponding tints in the auditorium from the principal lighting fixture.

It is possible in practically every theatre to add interesting artistic touches with special lighting effects. An example of interest is to be found in the theatre illustrated in Fig. 13, where the steps leading up on each side of the stage are made of glass and illuminated from below. The light is in colors and changes to correspond with the changes in the general illumination of the interior.

A simple means of getting an effective result upon the screen, draperies and curtains is accomplished by a projecting colored light from the lantern.

Stage Lighting

The stage is the center of interest. The picture, the orchestra, the settings for prologues and special features, combine to make the stage the point about which everything focuses.

In the lighting of the stage, the theatre has probably kept closer to traditional methods than in any other department of the playhouse. Methods have been devised of recent years however, that depart very radically from the old time usage. The results produced by the newer schemes are different and far in advance of the ordinary effects, and at a great saving for current. The lighting of the stage is now receiving more careful thought as to the artistic and economical possibilities. With the newer methods each lamp has its own reflector, thus making possible the most effective use of the light delivered from the lamp.

The losses in control and quantity of light with the old type borders was enormous. The later methods have consideration for efficiency in stage lighting. They are scientifically based upon the fundamental principles of light control. The illumination of the stage by direct reflection with its remarkably exact control of light seems to be a step in the right direction as against the old borders whose rays were unconfined.

A type of foot-light of new design is shown in Fig. 18 and a border in Fig. 19. As will be noted, these types of lighting equipment contain a reflector for each individual lamp, enabling the producer to direct the light where it will be most effective.

Conclusion

Illuminating Engineers, Electricians, and the men who have charge of lighting affairs around the theatre, are playing a part of increasingly greater importance. It is too often the case in the lighting of theatres that the method of illumination is selected after the building is almost completed, with the result that the lighting equipment in no way fits or harmonizes with the other features of the building. It should be kept carefully in mind that the lighting is just as essential as the seats, draperies, etc. The cooperative efforts of the theatre owner, architect, and contractor in making a careful study of the problem along with other details, will be rewarded by most surprising and pleasing results.

Condenser Breakage

An inquiry has been received from W. L. Strawn of the Star theatre, Arcadia, Fla., concerning breakage which he is having with his condensers. In his letter it was stated that a 6A and 6B Powers lamphouse was used in the projection booth with the result that condensers in the 6B gave very good service, while the condensers in the 6A were continually breaking. However, from the details given on this trouble it is impossible to give an accurate reply as to the exact cause of this breakage. A condenser is a piece of glass and will always be subject to breakage in extreme heat and where sudden changes of temperature take place or if the glass is put under a strain. Condenser breakage can be reduced to a minimum by careful attention to ventilation and the elimination of any draft of cool air, and also by making sure that the condenser is loosely held in the mount in order to make possible the free expansion and contraction in changes of temperature. The elimination of breakage of condensers is a matter of good common sense and proper attention and should be under the control of all projectionists. However, the matter of a small, cooling draft may at times prove difficult to find.—Editor.

Dear Editor:

I am enclosing 25 cents in stamps for my membership button. I received your letters containing the labels and the membership card. I am more interested in your work now than ever before and if you care to send me some application blanks and something to certify that I represent you I will visit some of the theatres in nearby towns and try to get them in our organization. I would like to have some of the pledges that you print in the Motion Picture News. My number is 1828.

I am taking the liberty of asking a question here: Would it not be a good idea to have slides made that each member could purchase? I think that it could be arranged so that it could be done without costing the member too much. This would be a method of letting the public know of the good work done by the News.

Yours for better projection,

I am back on the job and writing you after a long absence, but have not forgotten the League. I am now chief projectionist for the Virginia State Board of Movie Censors.

I have installed two Simplex machines with incandescent lamp equipment and using a plain white screen. I am getting a dandy picture at 25 feet distance and using the 30 ampere 900 watt Mazda lamp.

I am asking you to please send me one of the forms and a new membership button. Will send you photograph of my projection room very soon.

Hoping to receive the above shortly, I remain

Grinding Noise

Here's an inquiry from one of the members who states that he has a peculiar grinding noise in the mechanism in one of his projectors and desires to receive information concerning the method of correcting same.

. . . . I have three Simplex machines in my booth. All are running okay except one. And, Ed., can you tell me the reason why it has a peculiar grind in the mechanism? It sounds like it was in the governor balls and then like it is in the gears, but I had the machine apart quite a few times but can't find the trouble. It may be a small matter and it may be a large matter; anyway, I can't get it right. The machine runs all right but that grind gets my goat. . . . .

Frank Pratka, No. 1612.
Cozy Theatre,
La Grange, Tex.

Answering the above inquiry concerning the trouble with the Simplex machine, it is suggested that Brother Pratka's trouble is probably due to one of the following causes, which may be corrected through the use of the Simplex Instruction Book.—Editor.

1. Gear attached to friction disc (X-8) being worn.

2. Removing intermittent movement and not replacing same the way it was ground in at the factory. Correct way to do this will be found on page 4, paragraph 3, of the Simplex Instruction Book.

3. Flywheel gear (G-148-G) being worn.

Loose Intermittents

Enclosed you will find membership blank for the N. A. M. L. also 25 cents in stamps for a new button and my picture which I hope you will use.

I believe the N. A. M. L. is a good thing to which all projectionists should belong.

I have seen so many projectionists using Simplex machines keeping their intermittent sprocket so loose there was fully an eighth-inch play in it—intermittent movement has no support on the one end, all that is necessary is to keep the sprocket clean and renewed when needed. If it has too much play loosen the three screws on the intermittent case and tighten the nut with the intermittent case wrench between the sprocket and case.

Also send me some more labels as I work here today and some other place tomorrow.

Yours for better projection,
Cecil Fernandez,

West Tampa, Fla.

Method for Determining the Correct Screen Illumination for the Theatre

THE matter of regulating and determining the intensity of light actually falling on the projection screen appears to the average exhibitor and projectionist a very difficult proposition. This matter of light intensity cannot be determined by inspection with the eye as it has been conclusively proven that the eye cannot retain comparative values of light intensity long enough to allow comparisons to be made.

The foot candle meter, the small portable photometer which can be used very conveniently for measuring intensity of light, is exceptionally well adapted for the determination of the screen illumination and should be used occasionally by all theatres to find out just what intensity of light is being used on the screen. While this instrument itself sells at a very nominal figure ($25.00) it is quite possible for the exhibitor or projectionist to secure the loan of one of these apparatuses from a local light and power company or electrical illumination dealer.

The method of using this device simply consists of making one adjustment of the voltage by means of a small rheostat and then holding the instrument up against the screen at various points and noting the different readings. In this way the average screen illumination may be determined. Very likely many exhibitors will find that the amount of light received by the screen is ridiculously low or high. The writer has had the experience of testing screens where the illumination fell as low as 1 foot candle (units of light measured by the foot candle meter) and again as high as 16. Both of these figures represent extreme values. In the majority of cases it appears that a screen illumination approximately 3 to 5 foot candles gives very satisfactory results although of course such elements as general illumination of the house and the type of screen used have an important bearing on the final results.

The accompanying photographs of the foot candle meter show the neat compactness of the apparatus. Figure 2 shows a detailed view of the scale on which is read the foot candle intensity of light appearing on any given plane. It will be noted that the extreme right of the small row of dots in this photograph is black and that the extreme left is very light and that at an intermediate point (approximately at the number 10) the color of the dots and the surrounding area is approximately the same color. It is at this point that the reading of the foot candles is made.

It is highly recommended that every exhibitor and projectionist secure the use of one of these instruments to determine the relative value of light used on his screen and in so doing insure that the proper projection conditions are being employed.

Such scientists as Dr. Stratton, Bureau of Standards and Massachusetts Institute of Technology; and Dr. Berliner, telephone engineer, have given expert advice on acoustics for the new Washington Auditorium. Twenty private boxes and twenty mezzanine boxes will be a feature of the auditorium. A 25,000-foot exhibition hall will be available. Two boilers with 9,000 square feet radiation will heat the hall. Two centrifugal fans, each replacing 40,000 cubic feet of air a minute, operated by ten-horsepower motors, and a $50,000 pipe organ presented by the Lions Club, are important technical features.—Knappen.

"Sans Souci," Ybor City, Fla., Reopens

Harney Kendrick has traded his Sans Souci theatre and building, in Ybor City, for a sixty-five acre orange grove. The new owner is W. A. Boling, who announces that he will remodel, and rename the building, calling it the Boling Block. The plans are to add another story and make the block one of the most modern in Ybor. The Sans Souci theatre has had rather a checkered career. For several years it was quite a popular house and made lots of money. Then the business moved down the street and several attempts to put the house over met with disaster. After being dark for nearly a year, it re-opened last week with a Cuban Company and are pulling satisfactory business.—Leslie.

Exposition of Modern Inventions to Honor World's Greatest

ONE of the features of the Universal Exposition of Inventions and Patents to be held in Grand Central Palace, New York City, February 17-22, 1923, will be to celebrate, each day of the Exposition, one of the world's great inventors or scientists.

In view of the great interest shown by foreign governments in the Exposition, the first day, Saturday, February 17th, will be International Day. Then, the following week will open with Sunday as Marconi Day or Radio Day; Monday, Steinmetz Day, in honor of Dr. Chas. P. Steinmetz, the electrical wizard, of the General Electric Co.; Tuesday, Edison Day, in honor of Thomas A. Edison, America's great inventor; Wednesday, Bell Day, in honor of the late Alexander Graham Bell, who made the modern telephone possible; and Thursday, Westinghouse Day, in honor of the late George Westinghouse, inventor of the air brake and many other inventions that have made railroad travel safe, and founder of the Westinghouse Air Brake Co., Pittsburgh.

The object of this Exposition is to fulfill an important universal need, and it is intended to:—

(a) Bring the capital of America and the inventive brain of the world together.

(b) Give all inventors full opportunity to show the pubic, the manufacturer, the merchant, the capitalist and financier, the possibilities for utility, business, trade and commerce that lie in their inventions.

Inventors whose devices may be adjudged to combine novelty and utility with commercial practicability, will be awarded, by qualified board, cash prizes, gold, silver and bronze medals and certificates of merit.

The Exposition will be a veritable "Clearing House of Ideas" through which the man of originality and ideas is brought in personal contact with the man in need of ideas and with the man of money.

The Exposition of Inventions and Patents will be a place where any one with an idea; formula; process; labor saving plan, device, etc.; improvement on machinery; new invention; a developed and patented specialty, or anything salable can exhibit. This will enable the manufacturer who is looking for some sort of device which will lessen the labor and cost of producing his wares, or assist in the economic production of his raw material or its procural, or help to secure the economic manufacture of such raw material; or the capitalist who is searching for some clever device or process in which he can see the possibility of increasing some of his idle money, go and see what the man of ideas has to offer.

U. S. Positions Open for Photographers

Washington, D. C., Oct. 24.—The Civil Service Commission announces that an examination will be held for the existing vacancies in the motion picture activities of the Federal governmental departments at Washington, and in the field.

Division of Publications, Department of Agriculture, wants a photographic laboratory aid to fill the existing vacancy, at $780 a year, and other positions ranging from $780 to $1,100 a year.

For motion picture laboratory employes who wish to pursue their photographic and technical training further, this is a fine opportunity to work at the nation's seat of government and observe the administrative machinery. Facilities for advance through study, the library of Congress, Public Library, University libraries, technical work of the Bureau of Standards, Carnegie institutes and others in optics, projection, projecting machinery, etc., all offer a great experience to the student in the industry.

The usual citizenship and military preference stipulations are important to the placing of all applicants.

Practical questions count fifty points, and education and experience count for the remaining fifty.

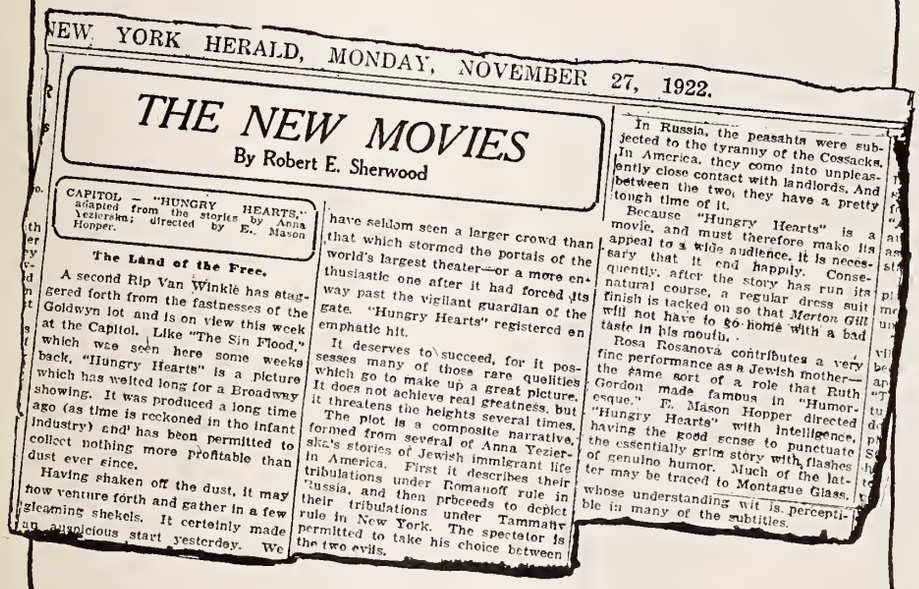
"HUNGRY HEARTS" OPENS AT NEW YORK'S CAPITOL



NEW YORK HERALD, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1922.

THE NEW MOVIES

By Robert E. Sherwood

CAPITOL — "HUNGRY HEARTS," adapted from the stories by Anna Yezierska; directed by E. Mason Hopper.

The Land of the Free.

A second Rip Van Winkle has staggered forth from the fastnesses of the Goldwyn lot and is on view this week at the Capitol. Like "The Sin Flood," which we seen here some weeks back, "Hungry Hearts" is a picture which has welted long for a Broadway showing. It was produced a long time ago (as time is reckoned in the infant industry) and has been permitted to collect nothing more profitable than dust ever since.

Having shaken off the dust, it may now venture forth and gather in a few gleaming shekels. It certeinly made a auspicious start yesterday. We have seldom seen a larger crowd than that which stormed the portals of the world's largest theater—or a more enthusiastic one after it had forced its way past the vigilant guardian of the gate. "Hungry Hearts" registered an emphatic hit.

It deserves to succeed, for it possesses many of those rare quelities which go to make up a great picture. It does not achieve real greatness, but it threatens the heights several times.

The plot is a composite narrative, formed from several of Anna Yezierska's stories of Jewish immigrant life in America. First it describes their tribulations under Romanoff rule in Russia, and then prbceeds to depict their tribulations under Tammany rule in New York. The spectetor is permitted to take his choice between the two evils.

In Russia, the peasahts were subjected to the tyranny of the Cossacks. In America, they come into unpleasantly close contact with landlords. And between the two, they have a pretty tough time of it.

Because "Hungry Hearts" is a movie, and must therefore make its appeal to a wide audience, it is necessary that it end happily. Consequently, after the story has run its natural course, a regular dress suit finish is tacked on so that Merton Gill will not have to go home with a bad taste in his mouth.

Rosa Rosanova contributes a very fine performance as a Jewish mother—the same sort of a role that Ruth Gordon made famous in "Humoresque." E. Mason Hopper directed "Hungry Hearts" with intelligence, having the good sense to punctuate the essentially grim story with flashes of genuine humor. Much of the latter may be traced to Montague Glass, whose understanding wit is perceptible in many of the subtitles.

The Film Daily: "The thrills come thick and fast. A melodrama done without being ashamed. If your audiences like good old-fashioned melodrama this should please. Feature the explosion of the saw-mill."

Motion Picture News: "The story of a brother against brother, the feud between them revolving around a girl they both love. The climax when it arrives carries quite a kick."

The Trade Review: "This theme furnishes good entertainment. A regular assortment of complications, good suspense is developed and the love story sustains the interest."

Moving Picture World: A melodramatic plot centering around the lumbering industry. The action and spectacular values in the latter part of the story leave a more favorable impression.

The Joke Was On Them All—

The mollycoddle developed a wallop,
The jellyfish grew a spine,
The boob discovered a brain,
The coward found his courage,

With the Awakening of "The Inner Man."

A 100 per cent. audience picture of a man's struggle to find himself. It blends comedy with action and romance with dramatic tension.

THIS attraction will hold up to any statements you make regarding its entertainment value.

WYNDHAM STANDING gives one of the most striking performances of his career as a weak-kneed student who finds his manhood when taunted with the title of coward.

Leading support is given him by DOROTHY MACKAILL, who won much praise for her recent work with Mary Alden in "A Woman's Woman." Also featured is J. BARNEY SHERRY, lately seen in "Till We Meet Again, " "Secrets of Paris," etc.

GUSTAV VON SEYFFERTITZ, the villain, was an outstanding figure in "When Knighthood Was In Flower," "Sherlock Holmes" and "The Face in the Fog."

With such a cast interpreting a story which deals with the arousing of a man's instincts from timidity to raw courage; culminating in a fist battle which vindicates his manhood, and closing with the fulfillment of a wonderful romance; "The Inner Man" is one of the current features every exhibitor can jot down as a good bet.

No better testimony can be offered than this list of successful runs—

THE EXHIBITOR MUST SOLVE HIS OWN PROBLEM

No Producer, Distributor, or Booking Circuit Can Solve It for Him.

IF THIS BE TRUE:

What is the Exhibitor doing in a constructive way to protect his investment in theatre holdings and the good will he has builded with his patrons?

What is the Exhibitor doing toward permanently securing film rentals that will insure a profit to himself commensurate with the risk he takes?

What is the Exhibitor doing to protect himself against any movement in the industry that ultimately must be a burden to him?

What is the Exhibitor doing toward safeguarding his investment against any alignment that will tend to confine or restrict production or distribution.

What is the Exhibitor doing toward securing equitable film rentals during his good season, in order that slack periods do not absorb all his profits and more?

What is the Exhibitor doing in a constructive way toward keeping the independent producer independent and in business?

THE ANSWER IS THAT THE EXHIBITOR IS DOING NOTHING

These problems relate not only to the present and the immediate future —they affect vitally the Exhibitor's destiny.

The purpose of this advertisement is to advise the Exhibitor that a plan has been created to cover every phase of Exhibitor protection, which will sweep the country.

Every Exhibitor in America owes it to himself, irrespective of location, size of house, priority of run, or population, to write for details of this plan.

Is It Another "Miracle Man"?

Thousands of exhibitors are asking this question.

For "Heart's Haven" isn't like any other picture released in many years.

It is a masterly handling of the subject uppermost in the public mind today—does my will control my body?

Do you remember "The Miracle Man"? Nobody thought it was "what the public wanted" until the public itself stepped in and settled the doubt forever. Many critics have called "Heart's Haven" another "Miracle Man." Maybe it is; the first few big exhibitors who show it and exploit it will quickly find out.

The thinker will tell you that it is a masterpiece of psychology. The seeker after entertainment only will rate it a bully good picture.

So you've pleased both orchestra and gallery, and you won't have to defend your judgment when they file out after the show. If you are honestly trying to give the public "What it wants," this is what it really wants, because it is the one big topic of conversation on the tongue of everyone old enough to think!

A week's prerelease showing in Los Angeles turned into a three weeks' sell-out. Another prerelease showing in Boston not only registered capacity business, but received the critical endorsement of every big newspaper in the city. Three hundred theatres booked it before release date, for a total of one thousand days!

When you deal for "Heart's Haven" you are playing with a big-time picture. It is the clearest-cut answer to the query, "What does the public want?" that has been given by any picture released in months. If you doubt it, listen-in on the next conversation you can, in club, in church, on the street corner, or right in your own theatre! Folks no longer talk about "How do you feel?" It's all about "How do you think?"

The presentation of "Shadows" featuring Lon Chaney in our house during the week beginning Friday Nov. 17th, 1922 has been the source of much favorable comment on the part of the patrons of the Strand.

During the screening of this unusual and very wonderful picture the audience never loses interest as the story unfolds itself; in fact I have met a number of my patrons who have seen it the second time and enjoyed it all over again.

The engagement of "Shadows" has resulted in the best business at this theatre in the past six months- this in a season which is notable for the release of a large number of big pictures.

THE CAST

STRONGHEART, THE WONDER DOG

|---|---|
| Irene Rich | Lee Shumway |
| Joseph Barrel | Roger Manning |
| Philip Hubbard | Jean Metcalf |
| Evangeline Bryant | Lady Silver, a wolf |

CHARACTER OF STORY

A tale of the far north with the thrill and the tang of the north woods and the vast snow wastes, peopled with figures of love, hate, fear, courage and cowardice —sensational drama with moments that make you choke and cheer. And Strongheart, the wonder dog in a marvelous role.

POINTS OF APPEAL

The wonderful acting of the most marvelous dog of the screen. A baby every woman's heart will yearn for. A strong love story in a most unique setting. A great out-of-doors picture with wild animals in their forest homes. Most exquisite scenes in the snow-capped wastes of the northlands, with exceptional photography and lighting effects.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

A beautiful girl braves the dangers of the Northern trail to carry financial aid to her brother and sweetheart, who are mining for gold in Alaska. Follows days of terrible hardships, where the cold is intense and food scarce. Then the sweetheart proves a traitor, and in a terrific battle slays the girl's brother by hurling him down a mountain side into a river. The girl herself is saved by Brawn, her giant dog which she has taken with her. Fleeing from the slayer she receives protection from a trapper. Held prisoner with him alone in his cabin by the terrific storms, he insists on a perfunctory marriage arrangement to protect her. But later she learns to love the man. In their struggle to get back to civilization they are attacked by wolves. In the fight the dogs run away with the sled and the baby, which is at the mercy of the wolves. Brawn, after a terrific fight, rescues the baby. The dog's wonderful deeds, his devotion to his mistress, his love affair with Lady Silver, a wolf vamp, and his human understanding in all situations, will make any audience gasp with wonder.

HIGH LIGHTS AND THRILLS

Battle of two men on a snow capped mountain on the edge of a steep declivity.

Man hurled down side of mountain rolling over and over until he tumbles off the ice into a swift stream.

A girl, left alone in the snow wastes, battles for life against a terrific storm.

Her battle with a half-crazed trapper.

The hunt of the wolf pack in the famine lands.

The attack of the wolves on a man and woman and baby at night.

The wolf pack overpowers and kills an entire dog team.

Strongheart outwits the wolves and steals a lost baby from under their noses.

Strongheart's fierce battle with the wolves.

His thrilling race across the snow hills carrying the rescued baby back to the grief demented mother.

Strongheart's battle with the man who threatened his mistress, and the death of the man.

Strongheart's love affair with Lady Silver, a wolf vamp.

The strange marriage of a kissless bride snowed in alone with a man in the far north.

The dawning of a girl's love for her enforced husband.

EXPLOITATION

Considerable interest has been centered on police dogs since the war. It should be easy to secure one. Cover it with a blanket with lettering to show that Strongheart will be at your theatre. Have the dog led by a man dressed in trapper outfit about the streets.

If there is snow on the ground, have the trapper drive a dog team with a sledge about the town with appropriate inscription on a banner.

A dog contest to find the smartest dog in the neighborhood will arouse the interest of all the children. Give tickets to the prize winner. This can be worked in conjunction with the newspapers.

A stencil of a dog's foot, with which to whitewash giant dog tracks on the sidewalk leading to your theatre, will make them follow it in.

Dress your lobby with a Northern atmosphere.

Use cut-outs of Strongheart from the 24 and the six sheet posters.

An Honor Roll

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has asked one hundred persons—within and without the industry—each to submit to us a list of twelve individuals who, as they see it, have in an outstanding way constructed and bettered this art-industry.

A complete resume of the results will be published in the Christmas issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS—the twelve names receiving the highest number of votes, all the other selections made, the reasons for each selection and the list of the jury of one hundred. The February issue of Photoplay Magazine, out about the same time, will give the complete facts to the public.

It is a pleasure to record here the unusual interest manifested on all sides in this project. At least one-third of all the lists have been promptly submitted. They indicated a thoughtfulness together with a broad spirit of cooperation that, in itself, is the best evidence possible that we are advancing as an industry along true lines. Certainly we should have high standards and look up to them. That was the purpose of the survey—to indicate these standards.

We are not content to say that the final list of twelve, whatever names it may include, will be a complete list of the motion picture standard bearers.

The lists already submitted show a remarkable unanimity of opinion upon a number of individuals. From this point they vary considerably—as should be.

When one proceeds with an effort to give recognition to each of the many branches of the industry—producers, screen artists, business organizers, inventors and those who have developed inventions, publicists, etc., it is difficult to include within a list of twelve all those who really merit recognition.

Also it is natural to give most attention to the present era of the art and industry. There have been, in past periods, some who stood forth as prominently then as do others now and who did much with what they then had to do with.

But we already know that the list of twelve will be a highly representative one and that even a single vote is a sign of recognition that anyone may feel proud of.

It is all very interesting, instructive, and we believe, highly progressive.

We intend to do much more than just publish the names of those who are elected to the "Honor Roll."

Each juror has been asked to give a reason for each choice. These reasons will be used as material for a constructive story about each of the winners.

There will be a bit of humor, too. Some of our jury have commented on their selections with the idea of having a bit of fun, while still maintaining a serious purpose.

All in all, "The Honor Roll" will be readable and constructive, as well as a tribute to the many great people the industry has evolved.

It will be worth all the time and effort that MOTION PICTURE NEWS is devoting to it.

VOL. XXVI DECEMBER 9, 1922 NO. 24

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

LET us be thankful this Thanksgiving week for an end to picture depression, for the plucking of censorship in the bud by the gentry of Massachusetts, for the optimism expressed by the producers, for the production of such sterling photoplays as "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Quincy Adams Sawyer," "Remembrance," "Brothers Under the Skin," "Blood and Sand," "Timothy's Quest," "The Old Homestead," "To Have and To Hold," "Oliver Twist," "East Is West," "Shadows," "The Toll of the Sea," "Grandma's Boy," "Tess of the Storm Country," "Minnie," "Sherlock Holmes," "Hungry Hearts," "Lorna Doone," "The Town That Forgot God," "The Storm," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "The Man Who Played God," "The Eternal Flame," "Rags to Riches," and "Clarence."

Let us be thankful for the co-operative spirit which is gradually being manifested among the producers, for Will Hays who is bringing the screen back to normalcy, for the opportunity of sitting comfortably in a big picture palace watching one of the better productions, for the pleasure of hearing an orchestra render Wagner, Gounod, Tschaikowsky, Verdi for a price within the reach of us all, for the elimination of the parasite who would make capital of some nine-day sensation to record on the screen, for the news cameramen who daily endanger their lives to give us the highlights among the current events, for the enlistment of such writers as Hughes, Tarkington and Ade to serve the screen and uplift it, for the dawn of a new day in picturedom with the cheap, tinsel atmosphere on the road to oblivion.

Let us be thankful for an industry which gives work to hundreds of thousands and caters to millions every day, for an industry which is guided by such sound showmen and business men as Zukor, Brunet, Godsol, Atkinson, Loew, Powers, Lichtman, Laemmle, Fox, Hodkinson, Kane, Smith, Warner, Rowland, Griffith, Abrams, Hammons, Shallenberger, Urban, Selznick, for such stars and directors as Fairbanks, Pickford, the Talmadges, Keaton, Lloyd, Chaplin, Barthelmess, Lloyd, Hughes, Ince, Neilan, King Robertson, Barker, Vidor, Millarde, Vignola, Ingram, and Borzage, who are ever trying to give us bigger and better things.

IT'S an enterprising move on Selznick's part to present Will Rogers' merry quips on topics of the day in its News Weekly. The genial Will is rapidly coming into the foreground as America's foremost humorist. Whatever he says or writes about is not only timely but is twisted into a quaint and humorous wheeze. It's a gift. If Lincoln were alive he would drop Artemus Ward and pick up Will Rogers. There is scarcely a banquet in New York which does not have the pride of Oklahoma as one of its after-dinner speakers. And because his sense of humor colors his conversation, a banquet in which he sits at the big table is a treat indeed. Rogers' quips in the Selznick News Weekly enliven the program.

CONGRATULATIONS are in order and may they be heaped upon the Technicolor company for its superlative achievement with colors. "The Toll of the Sea" carries a blend of harmonious colors which are certain to invite "Ohs and Ahs" from the audience when scenes of surpassing beauty pass before the eye. It's been a long, hard road to find an adequate color scheme. Journey's end has not been reached, but the half-mile post has long since been passed. Experimentation will continue.

"The Toll of the Sea" is an excellent subject for color treatment. What land is richer in colors than China? Here we have a Chinese background for a story of an ancient legend. Here are the flowers, the sea, the soft skies in a harmonious arrangement of exquisite shades. Here is the land of the love boat and romance.

The feature is not only pictorially effective (its color treatment will act as a magnet) but it offers in the bargain a story admirably suited for the Technicolor process. One forgets environment and is transported into a rich make-believe land. If you do not make a dollar with it, you owe it to your audience to give them something out of the ordinary. Where is the person who does not love a beautiful flower or a glorious sunset?

AMERICAN ingenuity is at it again. During the recent English election when the results were shown in London's Trafalgar Square, Famous Players-Lasky of England and Goldwyn, co-operated with John Bull, the chief organ of popular opinion, to treat the vast throng with entertainment during the pauses between the returns. Famous put over a half dozen Mack Sennett comedies, while Goldwyn responded with seven thousand feet of short subjects, including some of the Inkwell comedies. And the show was the biggest thing in London, playing to an audience of some 20,000 appreciative spectators. John Bull issued slides which acknowledged the free loan of the films.

This is probably the biggest audience which ever looked upon a motion picture. Score a mark for American ingenuity and good will. Score a mark for Famous and Goldwyn, who know how to advertise their products.

THE simplicity of the rural drama—the homespun realities and heart throbs which always balance life in the rustic places always finds response with the spectator. We predict success for "Quincy Adams Sawyer." There is nothing false in its story and characterization. It conquers with its sincerity, humanity and reality. And what a climax! It fairly takes the breath away with its dynamic force. Will Sawyer reach the raft in time to prevent the helpless, blind girl from sure death? The current is swift and drives relentlessly toward the falls. It is clever manipulation of the camera which records the plunging waters, the surging river, the mad ride of the Bostonian, and the plight of the girl on the raft. The ice jam made "Way Down East." The river rescue makes "Quincy Adams Sawyer." The picture is surely one of the real hits of the season.

THIS issue contains two articles of special interest, not only of trade importance but significant in the variety of views that may be honestly maintained about the motion picture business.

One is the strictly news story concerning the suit Vitagraph is bringing against Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the other is the interview with Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Vitagraph, the oldest producing concern in existence, veteran of the days when General Film Company flourished, is suing Famous Players alleging the latter is a trust that prohibits competing distributors from obtaining first run playing dates.

Mr. Lichtman, erstwhile Famous official, surely familiar with the inner workings of this organization, and in a position to judge how much power and influence his former business associates possess, makes the statement that the first run theatres are not closed to independent pictures.

All of which rather invites the statement, that today there really is no first run theatre. Cactus Center plays many a picture ahead of Broadway and the Loop and in neither case is the rental price in any way affected by the time period of the playing dates.

What Vitagraph means, is that certain theatres in certain cities able to pay big rentals are closed to all distributors except Famous Players-Lasky. What Mr. Lichtman means is that he is able to obtain satisfactory playing dates in these same cities.

Anyway it is interesting to find so widely divergent a view on such a subject.

SCARCELY a person one meets these days, outside of the industry, but begins to ask questions about the slump in attendance at motion picture theatres. They seem to have an idea that we have gone to the eternal bow-wows in the past two years and at present writing are just one jump ahead of the sheriff.

This is not a satisfactory condition. Nothing succeeds like success and people are still quite a lot like a flock of sheep.

The public should be informed, intelligently, that we are doing as well as can be expected and that this season has brought forth more worth while pictures than any preceding year.

THAT is a great idea that Frank Hall has put over at Union Hill, N. J. He, speaking in the singular because he is the president of a local company, has two theatres, duplicates of each other except for size and nicknamed "The Twins," in the same building. One house will play pictures exclusively, the other, just opened, is a vaudeville theatre.

There is a direct connection from one theatre to the other although each has a separate main entrance and is complete in itself.

The idea is unique, rivaling the two picture houses in Cleveland now under the Loew theatres banner, built one on top of the other.

One theatre has an entrance from Superior Street and the other from Euclid Avenue.

Superioir and Euclid run practically parallel, but Euclid is several feet higher in altitude than Superior, allowing direct entrance to both houses without steps. There is direct connection between the two by means of a stairway.

Harold Lloyd said that his visit was wholly for rest and recreation. # Market Not Closed States Al. Lichtman

Independent Exchanges Booking Best Theatres In All Parts of Country

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Al. Lichtman, president of the Al. Lichtman Corporation, recently lunched with William A. Johnson, editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The table talk ran to pictures, especially independent productions, current and coming and the manner in which they are being received by the exhibitors of the country.

Mr. Lichtman expressed himself forcefully and in a constructive vein on the open market. His words are worth repeating. Therefore we place them in type, as, perhaps, the first of a series of interviews with leading independent producers and distributors.

IT sems to me that I have a message for the readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. I am not courting publicity for our concern and our pictures; it is publicity only for what I regard as a cause, one of deep and general interest to the industry. I refer to the open market.

The market today is not closed. It is not in the hands of a few producer-distributors, no matter what hasty and discouraged statements to that effect are made from time to time. It has never been closed, but right now it is wider open than ever and the future outlook is healthy and good.

I must now speak briefly of our own success, but I do so only to point the moral, and I hope that my remarks in this connection will be taken as seriously and broadly as I make them.

We started in business in June. We have made five pictures. They have been sold and are being sold successfully through existing exchanges. Only one new exchange office was opened—in Washington. We did not, in other words, find it necessary to saddle ourselves and the industry with the heavy expense of a new exchange system. Our output has been readily sold for Great Britain and Australia.

"Rich Men's Wives" has just been booked by the Chicago theatre, perhaps the largest and finest house in the world. That is just one instance of country-wide bookings in the big first-run institutions. These theatres are not closed to independent product—that's certain.

It is not our pictures alone that are meeting with this success. Other producers operating through independent exchanges are also booking the best theatres everywhere. The sum total—and that's the important thing—is that the exhibitor today everywhere knows that he can rely upon the open market for first class pictures. That, I repeat, is the important thing. That is the message I want to get over.

I am not a philanthropist. I am in business not for love of the open market, but because I believe it's a good business opportunity for me. I also believe, of course, that it's a healthful thing for the box office, for the whole industry, to have an open market. It's a good thing, a mighty good thing to have constantly new blood coming into the business and making high class attractions.

Don't believe any of this talk you hear about the market closing up. I've heard it every year for ten years or more. It's never closed. Just the same, there's only one entrance to it, and that is a good picture backed by good sales effort. One is as essential as the other.

I am leaving now for the Coast to see if we can't make still better pictures and to bring the selling end and the production end together for that purpose.

A few months ago I made a trip over the Middle West with our first picture and interviewed exhibitors everywhere. It was gratifying to me to have them take just a small concern so seriously. Today they are seeking a seasonal and regular supply from us. Doesn't that prove that this market is constantly open to the right methods of production and distribution and that the exhibitor wants it kept open? I think it does. I am positive it does.

Bromhead Confers with U. S. Distributors

British Producer Outlines Plan to Make Films Abroad Suitable for American Release

A NEW page was written in motion picture annals last week when, for the first time, a foreign producer conferred with a really representative group of American distributors as to how he might best produce pictures suitable for the American market.

The producer in question was Col. A. C. Bromhead, of the English Gaumont Company, and the occasion was a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, New York, on last Friday.

The Colonel, who returned to England on the Majestic on the following day, outlined his plans to make large and important productions in England with an American director and with American stars, with a view to making productions of value in the American market. The first is to be "The Quality of Mercy," from a Hall Caine story, to be directed by Tom Terriss.

Harry Warner, of Warner Bros., in commenting on the plan, stated frankly that he believed it was only in the most exceptional instances that a picture could be made abroad which would possess any great value in this country. He stated his belief that pictures made in England would be only moderately successful, at best, here, not because of any prejudice against things British or against England, but simply because producing conditions in England would not permit of making productions of a type and quality suitable for the American market.

M. L. Finkelstein, of Finkelstein & Ruben, First National Franchise holders at Minneapolis, stated his belief that if a good story is presented on the screen it makes no difference where the production came from; but he insisted on a good story with strong love interest.

Elmer W. Pearson, general manager of Pathe Exchange pointed out that by the methods used in exploiting and advertising in this country that names of stars and authors of prominence were assets to the box office, and that many British-made productions suffered in this country on this account. But he was inclined to the belief that there was a ready market here for well-made pictures, regardless of the source, or country, and pointed to the success of "Passion" with a star unknown to this country.

F. B. Warren, of the American Releasing Corporation, delivered an excellent talk, urging Bromhead to proceed with his program, but pointing out the need of having the continuity correct, and the action speeded to the viewpoint of America rather than England. It was his belief that such productions should and would be encouraged here. James R. Grainger Goldwyn, said he felt American audiences would welcome any good picture, and L. B. Boynton, of the Exhibitors Trade Review suggested that among the important matters that Bromhead bear in mind was the proper titling of his productions to meet American ideas.

At the close of the luncheon, the Colonel warmly thanked all of those present for their suggestions and opinions, and stated that he would return in the spring with a finished production, which would be his answer.

Famous Players-Lasky Is Sued by Vitagraph

Complaining Company Asks Damages of $6,000,000 Under Anti-Trust Acts

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY has filed suit in the amount of $6,000,000 against Famous Players-Lasky for alleged violation of the Federal Anti-Trust acts. Plaintiff alleges damage in the sum of $2,000,000 and asks three times that amount. The bill of complaint was filed in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, Tuesday, by William Marston Seabury, attorney for the plaintiff.

Other defendants named with Famous Players-Lasky are:

Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Jules E. Brulatour, Frank A. Garbutt, Cecil B. De Mille, Daniel Frohman, Emil E. Shauer, Eugene Zukor, Sidney R. Kent, William H. English, Frederick G. Lee, Maurice Wertheim, Gayer G. Dominick, Felix E. Kahn and Theodore F. Whitmarsh. No statement was issued by any of the defendants.

The suit is based upon the claim that in 1919 the defendants conspired together to control a large number of "first run" theatres of the country for the purpose of restraining trade and suppressing competition among the producers and distributors of motion pictures by booking all the pictures produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its subsidiaries in all the first run theatres owned, controlled or influenced by the Famous Players - Lasky Corporation and by excluding the pictures of the plaintiff and of other producers and distributors from such theatres.

The complaint contains much that is of great interest to the trade in general, especially at this time, and presents to the courts, for the first time, the legal status of the first run theatres, the legality of several of the booking circuits, particularly those in New England, in Philadelphia, in the South and in the Atlantic and Gulf states, and demands an inquiry into the extent to which producers and distributors of motion pictures may invade the field of the exhibitors.

Apart from the formal allegations of the complaint a full description of the three main branches of the industry is given, showing in detail the part played in the industry by the producers, distributors and exhibitors. The complaint asserts that there are about 38 key centres in the country in each of which there are now first-run theatres, and it is alleged in the complaint that the value of the exhibition in the first-run theatres of the country represents at least 50 per cent of the American-Canadian gross receipts of any picture exhibited in such theatres and in other theatres of the United States and Canada; not that the 50 per cent comes from the first-run theatres themselves, but that the percentage is due to the popularity and prestige the picture had obtained through its showing in the first-run theatre.

The substance of the charge against the defendants is that about the year 1919 they combined and conspired to monopolize a large number of first-class, first-run and other desirable motion picture theatres in the city of New York and elsewhere throughout the United States and Canada for the purpose of enabling them to dominate and influence the buying policy of all of those theatres and to enable the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to exclude the motion pictures of the plaintiff and in so far as possible the pictures of other competing producers and distributors therefrom.

The complaint alleges on infomation and belief that the defendant corporation, by combinations and agreements with Alfred S. Black and with the Black New England Theatres, Inc., obtained complete control over about 40 theatres in New England, and through one or more contracts with William Gray, who owns and controls about 20 other theatres in the same territory, Famous Players were able to book all, or almost all of the pictures produced by the Famous Players and its subsidiaries, to the exclusion of all, or almost all of the plaintiff's pictures and the pictures of a number of other producers from those theatres. It alleges that through one or more contracts with Jules Mastbaum, the Stanley Company of America and the Stanley Booking Corporation, the Famous Players exchanged $2,000,000 and 15,000 shares of the common stock of Famous Players for a large interest in these two important companies, one of which is said to own or control more than 57 theatres and has an exclusive booking contract with 92 other theatres, making a total of 149 theatres, all in the Philadelphia territory, and including the control of the entire eight first-run theatres in Philadelphia, and that as a result of these contracts all, or almost all of the pictures made by Vitagraph and a large number of other producers are excluded from this territory. It is further alleged in the complaint that as a result of similar contracts with Stephen A. Lynch and the Stephen A. Lynch Enterprises, Famous Players caused a corporation known as the Southern Enterprises, Inc., to be formed under the laws of the State of Delaware, which corporation is owned and controlled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and which owns, controls and operates a large number of desirable motion picture theatres, upwards of 140 in number, throughout the states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma, and that by reason of a contract with one or more stockholders of the Saenger Amusement Company the defendants directly or indirectly acquired and now control about 40 per cent of the stock of the Saenger Amusement Company, which, in turn, owns and controls more than 25 motion picture theatres, some of them first-class, first-run theatres, and in addition has the exclusive right to book pictures in more than 68 theatres, all within and throughout the states of Louisiana, Eastern Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, Missouri, Alabama and Western Florida, and that by reason of these contracts and arrangements most or all of the pictures of the plaintiff have been excluded with negligible exceptions from all, or almost all of the theatres.

The Realart Corporation is described as a "bogus" independent and it is alleged that this company was founded and is owned by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and was operated separately by it to make exhibitors who did not wish to buy the product of the Famous Players to take the Realart pictures in the belief that the companies were entirely separate and distinct while in reality the Famous Players actually owned and controlled the Realart company.

The complaint offers as further evidence of further attempts of defendants to interfere with the plaintiff's business the defendants' interference with the plaintiff's stars and other employes by offering fictitious inducements, chiefly by promise of increase in salary and additional opportunities for publicity and exploitation, to leave the employ of Vitagraph and enter the employ of the defendant company. It cites among other instances, the case of Alice Joyce, one of Vitagraph's best known stars. The complaint alleges that in the year 1920 the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation caused public announcement in London that thereafter the defendant company would market in London and throughout the world pictures in which Alice Joyce was starred or featured when in reality Miss Joyce was under a contract with Vitagraph which had until June, 1922, to run and of which contract the defendants were well aware.

The complaint charges that the effect of the acts complained of has been to curtail and discourage the production of first-class motion pictures since it is said that such pictures produced by others than the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are denied exhibition in a large number of first-run houses controlled by the Famous Players, and the inference is that no one would be willing to spend the large sums of money involved in the production of this type of pictures unless they are assured of a first-run showing.

It is claimed that the acts of the defendants enhanced the film rentals and prices of exhibition rights, and that trade is unreasonably restricted and competition among distributors and producers suppressed, and these contentions conclude with the statement that the defendants have used arbitrarily and oppressively the power obtained by the Famous Players "to force out of business its weaker competitors among the small and independent exhibitors of the country, many of whom for years have been in the motion picture business, supporting themselves and their families from the small profits realized therefrom, and to coerce such exhibitors into a sale to or a union with the defendants.

Making Theatre Fireproof Reduces Insurance Rates

INSURANCE rates on theatres can be greatly reduced if the theatres are made fireproof. Many articles dealing with the subject of fire hazards and precautionary measures have appeared in MOTION PICTURE NEWS during the past six months. New devices for the protection of theatres against fire have been described, and in many cases diagrammatical sketches showing commendable layouts for the use of safety appliances have appeared.

These articles will prove helpful in safeguarding the theatre.

Statistics of the Motion Picture Industry

Fourth and Last Installment of Questionnaire Figures Develops Interesting Facts

By L. C. Moen

COMING to the last section of the Babson Columbia-News questionnaire, headed "Miscellaneous," the first on the list is one of the most pressing and vital matters now before the industry—that of film rentals.

The first question was: "Do you consider film rentals too high?"

The objection may be raised in some quarters that exhibitors are prejudiced in this matter, and that their answer is a foregone conclusion. It must be remembered, however, that the purpose of this particular branch of the survey is to arrive at a picture of the film industry as seen through the eyes of the exhibitor, and if the exhibitor feels that rentals are too high, that is a condition which must be faced and dealt with.

Incidentally, as showing the keen interest felt in this question, it may be mentioned that it was answered by practically every exhibitor returning a questionnaire.

The tabulated totals yielded the following percentages:

Rentals too high.....95.23%
Rentals not too high..... 4.77%

Closely related to this was the second question: "Do you favor cheapening productions, if necessary, to lower rentals?"

The replies to this question were somewhat surprising, and showed that the exhibitor feels strongly that he must have pictures of proper quality, even though the rental question be a pressing one.

The following percentages were obtained on this:

Favor cheaper productions.....30.63%
Do not favor cheaper productions.69.37%

Even more significant than these figures, perhaps, were the notations which had been written in on a surprisingly large number of questionnaires, such as: "No, but greater efficiency can lower costs and keep present quality up"; "Too much waste in distributing"; "Wasteful methods could be eliminated which would bring rentals down without cheapening quality," and the like.

It is obvious, from the foregoing, that a great majority of exhibitors feel that rentals should come down, but that they should be lowered through economy and efficiency in the producing and distributing branches of the industry, and not through indiscriminate cheapening of productions.

The next question related to house overhead, and was worded: "What per cent of your average weekly gross goes for all house overhead, including salaries, but not including film rental or advertising?"

Average house overhead.....36.11%

Film rentals came next, the question being: "What per cent of your average weekly gross goes for film rental?"

The figure representing the average of all houses is:

Average film rental.....39.45%

The next expense item was: "What per cent of your average weekly gross goes for all advertising, accessories and exploitation?"

It was noticeable in tabulating these figures that in the large houses, this figure ran as high as 22 per cent, while in the case of the large circuits, where material is laid out co-operatively for many houses, it was as low as 8 per cent. The average figure, however, was:

Average advertising cost.....12.16%

Adding together the three foregoing figures, we obtain another figure representing the average cost of conducting a theatre, including all items:

Average operating cost.....87.72%
Remainder, or margin of profit..12.28%

Closely relating to the question on film rentals was the following query: "What per cent of your total film rental goes for the feature?"

This is important, since the remainder of the program, in the greater number of cases, consists of short subjects of one sort or another.

The average figure arrived at is:

Portion of rental for feature....63.35%
For remainder of program.....36.65%

The next question, while perhaps a bit indefinite, bears on the disputed matter of pressbooks and their usefulness. The great majority of exhibitors are friendly to pressbooks, as shown by the following tabulation:

Pressbooks help .....87.88%
Pressbooks do not help.....12.12%

Somewhat more limited in scope was the following question: "Do you exploit from the trade paper?" This applied to a somewhat smaller number of theatres, since a great many theatres advertise and use publicity media, but do not employ any great amount of exploitation, taking that word in its accepted sense. Taking this fact into consideration, the survey showed that the trade paper possesses a tremendous usefulness in this regard, as shown by these figures:

Exploit from trade paper.....58.91%
Do not exploit from trade paper.41.09%

The next and last question was: "Does your newspaper co-operate well with you?"

The replies to this question indicated that, while a large number of exhibitors do not enjoy as much co-operation as they would like from their newspapers, more than half of them do. The exact figures are:

Receive newspaper co-operation..57.02%
Do not receive good co-operation.42.98%

This concludes the exhibitor branch of the Babson-Columbia-News survey, and, in closing, the appreciation of all those connected with it must be expressed to the exhibitors all over the country who demonstrated their spirit of "Confidence and Co-operation" by taking the time and trouble to fill in and return the questionnaires sent them.

These questionnaires have not left the vaults of the Babson Statistical Organization at Wellesley Hills, Mass., and no outsider has been or will be permitted to see them.

Next week there will be presented in the News a brief resume of the survey made in 1916 by this publication, in co-operation with Famous Players-Lasky, and a comparison of the results obtained in the two surveys.

As soon after as may be possible, further statistics, relating to production and distribution, will be presented to readers of Motion Picture News.

Censorship Unlikely in Indiana Legislature

FEELING is growing that there will not be much of an attempt to push movie censorship in the session of the Indiana legislature which opens early in January. The situation following the election of Nov. 7 lends color to the belief.

Republicans will have a majority of two votes in the house of representatives. Already Democratic legislators are giving out interviews declaring their chief aim is not to introduce and pass a lot of bills but kill all that are not of an emergency nature and to sit particularly hard on anything meaning more taxes. Censorship cannot be effected without an extensive, salaried, governmental organization and hence the people would pay the bill. What happened in other states where censorship was an election issue also is expected to have a wholesome effect upon Indiana.

Canadian Theatres Show Increased Profits

Gross admissions in all theatres in Canada under the control of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, for the past fiscal 12 months totalled $2,546,100, according to an announcement just made by N. L. Nathanson, managing director of the corporation. This was in excess of the total admissions for the previous year by about $250,000, it was shown.

As an indication of the trend in the moving picture theatre business in Canada, it was announced that the earnings of the corporation for the first nine weeks of the current fiscal year, this being the period ending October 28, had reached the total of approximately $94,000. This represented the net profits for the nine weeks, as compared with the net profits of $54,600 for the corresponding nine weeks last fall. This represented an increase of approximately 70 per cent. over last year. The net profit for the recent period was reached after allowing $3,000 for depreciation. This meant that the total profits for nine weeks of September and October, 1922, prior to depreciation reduction, were about $120,000.

Picture Songs Subject of Kansas Discussion

A problem which is occupying the attention of the M. P. T. O. K. headquarters just now is the circulation of songs, dedicated to pictures and stars, which are taxable music. The Kansas organization is not charging that the songs are circulated by the producers with knowledge that exhibitors must pay the tax. The music is composed by the Society of Authors, Publishers and Composers of America and is taxable—that is what concerns the exhibitors chiefly.

Whether the music tieup with the publishers has been intentional on the part of the producers or not, the exhibitors do not know, but at the completion of an investigation now under way, according to C. E. Cook, business manager of the Kansas organization, the exhibitors will know and pressure will be brought to bear upon the matter.

Frank Woods Outlines Production Plans

With Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris Will Promote "Different" Pictures

By Chester J. Smith

ENTER a new producing unit in the field, or rather three producing units combined into one. Frank Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris are names to conjure with in the motion picture industry. They have been making pictures a good many years for others, and now they have decided to do some producing in their own interest.

Authors, editors, directors, supervisors and what-not, Woods, Buchanan and Harris have their own ideas about pictures, and they are going to do their producing along the lines of these ideas. Strangely, they agree upon all the essential points. If their plans work out as they hope they should be able to produce different pictures and better pictures, and in the making the product may be handled more economically than has been the general rule heretofore. Distributors and exhibitors should also benefit by this economic handling.

Just what name this new organization will adopt is not yet known. It may be the Allied Authors or it may be the Associated Authors. At any rate the "Authors" has a significance. It is intended as a policy of the new concern to encourage a greater association between authors and producers, and to make picture writing more worth while for authors. In fact the author, now more or less obscure so far as his relation to the finished story goes, is to be in a greater degree the author in fact. He is to paint the picture to be reflected upon the screen, and it is to be painted as largely as possible as he visualizes it.

In other words, according to Frank Woods, who is the spokesman for the concern on this occasion, the author is to help prepare the story as he wants it and the director is to interpret it for the screen as pictured by the author.

"What's wrong with the pictures?" queries Frank Woods.

And he answers:

"Two things."

"First, they are being produced in too many cases by manufacturers, by business men, who, with VERY few exceptions, could not personally do any one thing essential to the success of a picture. They have developed salesmanship, but not the actual making of the pictures. Often they don't know what it's all about. There are exceptions, of course, like Mr. Lasky, for instance, who talks the language of the author and director; also the United Artists and Thomas H. Ince and a few others are experienced producers.

"And the second thing:

"By reason of the ignorance of many manufacturers, they have set the director as the chief element in the making of a picture. They have made the director the real author. As a consequence writers have been obliged to limit their ability to the creative ability of the director.

"The director's art is an interpretative art. They are not, generally speaking, authors. Ninety-five per cent of them have been actors. On the stage through the spoken word they built the picture of the author. There is no reason why it should be greatly different on the screen.

"The majority of these authors who are doing work for the screen have entertained millions by painting word pictures in the written novel or through the medium of the spoken stage. They have created entertaining and instructive fiction in these other mediums; why should it not be possible for them to think also in pictures?

"Authors whose works have been adapted to the screen have rarely been able to recognize their stories in the finished product. We are going to try to modify this condition. We are not promising to perform miracles, but we sincerely believe we will be able to give authors a more sympathetic opportunity to express themselves than has been the practice in the past. It is along this road, we believe, that the future progress of the motion picture must follow. Authorship must be encouraged.

"Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Harris and I have supervised, directed and edited productions, but first we were writers and authors. We know that through authors we have to get our stories. We will act much in the capacity of an editor of a magazine or newspaper who knows what space he has to fill and what he wants to fill it with. We will work very closely with the writers and assist and edit their stories with them as we can.

"We will have our authors and directors just as closely allied as we can, but primarily the duty of the director will be to place on the canvas the picture as conceived by the author. Artistic and atmospheric interpolations may be supplied by the director, but the latter will not re-write the stories in transposing them to the screen, as has been done by too many producing organizations in the past.

"We expect also to be able to produce pictures more economically than is now too often the case, because we will have practically three producing units operating as one. By rotating our productions we can give every department the opportunity to function in its turn, thus eliminating excessive overhead. When each department has finished its part in a picture it will start immediately to work upon the next. This sort of economic arrangement is impossible equally in big organizations and in single unit organizations."

Producing plans have not yet been completed by the new organization. What they are attempting now is to complete releasing arrangements. And, according to Mr. Woods, they have four propositions under consideration.

One thing has been determined and that is that they will produce in Los Angeles. Just when they will get under way depends upon the completion of a multitude of small details that are now occupying the attention of all three in New York.

This is not the first time Messrs. Woods, Buchanan and Harris have been associated. But their past association has always been in the interest of other parties. Buchanan first went to Lasky to assist Woods with supervising and editing. Harris also worked under Woods' supervision as a writer with Lasky. Therefore they are familiar with each other's systems and styles, which should be of mutual benefit.

That all three are well qualified to conduct an enterprise such as they are now organizing is shown by the activities in which they are engaged at present in New York City. Woods is confining himself almost exclusively to launching the new enterprise, after having completed his duties with the Lasky organization. Harris is writing the next picture for Mary Pickford, and Buchanan is busy putting on a new stage play for Morosco.

There are few men better or more favorably known in the picture industry than Frank Woods. He is among the pioneers. His entry into the game dates back to 1907 and 1908, when he was the first to take up the work of reviews and other constructive criticism for the Dramatic Mirror. Then he went to Kinemacolor and Universal and still later with D. W. Griffith as manager, superintendent and editor of productions for the Mutual Company, the organization through which Reliance and Majestic Productions were released.

Woods was given credit on the screen for having written, with Mr. Griffith, the continuity for "The Birth of a Nation." He has also acted in collaboration or supervised or edited many other of the leading productions of recent years. His work with Lasky has been of a supervisional and editorial nature, and his efforts have been responsible, at least in part, for many of the successes of that concern.

Thompson Buchanan is a playwright of considerable note. Among his better known Broadway successes are "Civilian Clothes" and "A Woman's Way." He was for some time with Goldwyn in a supervisional and editorial capacity, and later went to Lasky as assistant supervisor and editor to Frank Woods.

Like Woods, Elmer Harris is also among the pioneers of the industry. In the early days of the one-reelers he was a generous contributor to the screen. A little later he wrote and produced a number of successful stage plays for Morosco, among them "So Long Letty," in which Charlotte Greenwood starred, and "Canary Cottage."

Four years ago Harris went with the Lasky Company as a writer under Frank Woods' supervision. He has enjoyed a wealth of success as a writer of comedies, particularly those in which Wally Reid was starred. He then went to Reelart studio, where he was in charge as supervisor and editor-in-chief, and contributed a number of original stories. From Reelart he went to United Artists and is now concluding the continuity of the latest picture for that star.

That the general management of the new organization will be in competent hands is evidenced by the fact that Clark Thomas has already been mentioned in that capacity. For two years he was general manager of the Ince studios after a year of similar experience with Metro.

Tuberculosis Seal Sale Due in December

Between December 1 and Christmas the Tuberculosis Association will conduct its annual sale of Christmas Seals, the proceeds of which will be practically their sole reliance for funds with which to carry on the work for the coming year. They are urging the support of the motion picture industry in the sale.

Western Penn. Exhibitors Hold Convention

Pointed Demand Made for Revision of Film Rentals Downward, Among Principal Business

A POINTED demand for a revision of film rentals downward, a rising vote of confidence in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and approbation of the course pursued by President Sydney S. Cohen and other national officers, were among the outstanding features of the big convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania which was held at the General Forbes Hotel, Pittsburgh, Friday afternoon, November 24th.

About 120 Theatre Owners were present, the theatres in nearly every city and town in the territory being represented. A luncheon featured the preliminary phases of the meeting. President Jerome Casper, of Pittsburgh, introduced Max Englesburg as the Chairman of the session.

The first speaker was National President Cohen. He was enthusiastically received and gave an extended review of the activities of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners since the Washington convention. He told of the many constructive moves made to advance the interests of the Theatre Owners, the lines of protection afforded them through the efforts of the National body and how opposing elements inside and outside the Industry have been held in check and prevented from carrying into effect lines of action which would have been extremely prejudicial to the Theatre Owners as a body and would have forced many out of business.

He recounted the moves now being made, if not entirely perfected, in the New England territory, which he claimed practically gave three interests of an interlocking character control of the business there. He said that this condition would certainly be duplicated in many sections of the country if not curbed by militant and aggressive Exhibitors' organization.

Mr. Cohen showed where the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America had advanced the interests of the Exhibitors in many ways. He gave detailed information about adjustments which had been made. He showed the moves made to overcome the Music Tax, and the outstanding advances made by Theatre Owners against censorship in Massachusetts and New York.

The affiliation made with Postmaster General Work to advance and develop the Postal Service, with Secretary of Labor Davis to help his Department in its immigration and other problems and other service connections with national and state officials were indicated to show the moves which in a definite way dignified the Theatre Owner and made the theatre a community center.

As Mr. Cohen progressed, he was frequently interrupted by applause, as the power and protection of organized effort and the accomplishments of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were made apparent.

National Executive Board Member, D. A. Harris made a very effective address in which he declared that National Organization was most essential to giving the Theatre Owner complete protection. He said that state and regional bodies should give the National Organization every possible aid. He declared that the Western Pennsylvania Theatre Owners was a militant body and said the National Organization should make specific and definite moves to bring about a reduction in film rental prices and suggested a number of ways through which this might be effected.

National Executive Board Member Harry Davis, of Pittsburgh, made a constructive speech urging complete support of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in what he contended were most effective business programs.

M. J. O'Toole, Chairman of the National Public Service Committee, congratulated the Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania on the election of John P. Harris to the Senate. He said Mr. Harris' presence at Harrisburg gave the industry representation there which was very essential to the protection of its interests in Pennsylvania.

Short addresses were also delivered by National Director I. W. McMahon, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and State President Martin G. Smith of Toledo, Ohio. President Jerome Casper made a very pleasing concluding address in which he thanked President Cohen and the other visitors for attending the convention and for their helpful addresses and promised the complete support of the Western Pennsylvania organization to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

A rising vote of approbation and approval of the National Organization and its officials was then given and a telegram of felicitation ordered sent to Dr. Francis Holley, who is now convalescing from the effects of an operation in St. Mary's Hospital, Rochester, Minn.

The convention was one of the most successful yet held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of W. Pa.

Attractions Planned for Theatre Owners Ball

AS an added attraction of the Theatre Owners' Ball, to be held at the Astor the night of Dec. 2, Lee Ochs, Chairman of the Committee, announces that Harry Reichenbach, Broadway's famous wit, will act as Master of Ceremonies.

Stars, prominent personalities and those famous in the film world will all come in for their share of Reichenbach's good-natured fun.

S. L. Rothafel's surprise, "In the Spotlight" promises a sensation of lighting effects, combined with a novelty which this premier showman says is new even to Broadway.

Vincent Lopez' two jazz bands will carry the musical end of the program. Dancing will be continuous until dawn. Dining will be at midnight.

Governor-Elect Alfred E. Smith will make his first formal appearance in public since his election, as will U. S. Senator-Elect, Royal S. Copeland.

Boston Paper Comments on Recent Victory

THE Boston Transcript, in an editorial following the defeat of censorship at the hands of the voters, commented as follows:

"In Massachusetts, for the first time in the United States, a proposal to establish a State Censorship of Motion Pictures came to popular vote and was rejected by a threefold majority. Such a defeat of one more effort to regulate the pleasures of a contented many according to the idea of an insistent few speaks for itself. Such an affirmation of the right of the citizen to private and individual choice, judgment, habit, in his entertainment rings like new assertion of ancient, once honored and by no means abandoned liberties.

"Two other consequences are as obvious. To give the makers of the movies freedom is not to grant them license. Not by them nor for them, but by the weight of public opinion working for the public good, was the victory won. The more, then, are they bound for the future to hold fast to the standards that for the present they have loudly professed. For the advocates of censorship, the way is equally clear. Obviously they frequent the pictures, else they would not have been so full of confident, sweeping assertion about them. Henceforth they may well reserve their patronage for the better films; while by every means in their power, they may seek to widen the understanding and raise the likings of the average public of the screen. Only so will progress come."

Kansas Exhibitors Name Legislative Committee

One hundred and twenty-five leading exhibitors in the state of Kansas were appointed as members of the M. P. T. O. Kansas Legislative Committee at a meeting of the executive board of the Kansas organization in Kansas City Tuesday. In legislative campaigns this newly formulated body promises to make history, in that it bids fair to become one of the most powerful factors in the Middle West in combating blue laws and radical legislation which is injurious to the motion picture industry.

Overseating a Problem in Western Canada

OVERSEATING is put down as the primary cause for any ills that the exhibitors of Western Canada are experiencing these days. W. P. Dewees, original First National franchise holder for Vancouver, is responsible for the assertion. Mr. Dewees has been in New York for the past two weeks as member of First National's rotating committee.

People are going to the picture houses in as great numbers as ever in his territory and gross business done remains the same, declared Mr. Dewees, but the construction of large houses "has squeezed the returns for exhibitors." In Vancouver where he is general manager for United Theatre, three first run houses are doing business in a city of 100,000. Two of these, the Allen and Rex, have a seating capacity of 2,000 and 1,000 respectively. In Victoria (population 35,000), the Royal, one of the first run houses, seats 1,800.

Mr. Dewees does not look for any immediate betterment of conditions declaring that the situation, which is a local one, must remedy itself.

Prosperity Dinner Planned For January 11th

On Thursday evening, January 11th, a representative gathering of the motion picture industry will be present at the "Welcome Prosperity Dinner of the Motion Picture Industry," to be held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, in New York City. Representatives of other leading industries will also be invited to attend.

The chairman of arrangements for the dinner is David R. Hochreich. Mr. Hochreich is the founder of the idea of the "Welcome Prosperity Dinner," and has the support of such representative men of action as Charles M. Schwab, E. F. Albee, Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Governor-Elect Alfred E. Smith of New York, United States Sentor-Elect Royal S. Copeland, Governor-Elect George S. Silzer of New Jersey, United States Senator-Elect Edward L. Edwards, William Randolph Hearst, B. S. Moss, P. A. Powers, F. J. Godsol, Jules Mastbaum, and Harry Heher.

Cleveland Fight Starts On Sunday Closing

What promises to be the first shot in the fight to legalize the Sunday motion picture show in Ohio was fired this week in Cleveland, when J. H. Locks demanded that every store in Cleveland Heights, a residence suburb of Cleveland, be closed on Sunday according to the state laws.

It is thought that this move on the part of the mysterious Mr. Locks is one to swing public opinion in favor of Sunday pictures by temporarily enforcing the "blue laws."

Mr. Locks, with his attorney, N. D. Davis, has notified all Cleveland Heights merchants that he will demand warrants for their arrest if they are open on Sunday. The merchants now operating on Sunday are a candy shop, a delicatessen shop, gas stations, drug stores, and real estate offices. The only motion picture theatre in this suburb is closed.

Chief of Police Barrows has issued the answer that Cleveland Heights is going along just as usual, and that no notice will be taken of Lock's demands; that while no common labor is permitted on Sunday in this section, the community is not so straightened as to want "blue Sundays."

Locks asserts that he is acting only as a private citizen. He has stated that he is in no way affiliated with the motion picture industry in any of its branches.

Watertown Theatre Fined for Withholding Tax

Indicted by the Federal Grand Jury in Albany, N. Y., on two counts charging wilful failure to make returns on serial numbers of admission tickets for three days in September and with failure to pay the tax on same, the Avon theatre in Watertown, N. Y., paid a fine of $250 in Federal Court this week. It is said that fully 100 theatres have been under suspicion in New York state, and that others may find themselves in the same boat with Avon.

The theatre contended that it did not wilfully violate the law and after the Attorney had explained conditions which prevailed and which resulted in the company being indicted, the court permitted a plea of guilty to an indictment which charged "accidental" failure to report the serial numbers.

Paramount Convention Ends; Officials Call Conference

ADOLPH ZUKOR, Jesse L. Lasky and S. R. Kent will remain at the West Coast studios of Famous Players-Lasky for a week, according to information received here.

Others of the Paramount convention departed Sunday for their homes. Friday, Paramount Week prizes were awarded: first to San Francisco Exchange, thirty eight hundred by Paramount and five hundred by Herman Wobber; in addition, manager H. G. Rosebaum receives cash prize of two thousand. Second prize goes to Los Angeles Exchange: Twenty-two hundred and fifty for exchange and twelve hundred fifty for manager O. V. Taggarth.

Of the four years Paramount has given these prizes, Los Angeles, Seattle and San Francisco have each won, fourth year prize going to Boston when it was under the personal representation of Harry Ballance, former Los Angeles branch manager, who was winner of the first Paramount prize.

Zukor has issued a call for a studio conference of writers, directors, contract players and heads of departments to be held this week to go over with him, Lasky and Kent the thirty-nine program announced during convention. This will give the production department a thorough knowledge of the program outlined at sales convention.

Nine Companies Organize for N. Y. Business

Nine companies incorporated in the motion picture business in New York state during the past week, representing a total of $3,202,500, this large amount being due to the incorporation of the Robbins Enterprises, Inc., located in Utica, and showing a capitalization of $3,000,000. Walter J. Green, W. C. Doolittle and Julius Rothstein of Utica, are directors and stockholders in the Robbins company. Other companies filing papers in the Secretary of State's office during the last few days were:

Exhibitors Paying Music Tax, Says Rosenthal

J. C. Rosenthal, general manager of American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, denies a statement attributed to A. J. Moeller in his address at the Missouri Exhibitors' convention and printed in the November 4th issue of Motion Picture News.

Mr. Rosenthal says there are over four hundred exhibitors in the state of Missouri regularly paying license fees for the right to publicly perform copyrighted music.

Allen Closes Deal for Ontario Theatres

Bernard Allen, father of Jule and J. J. Allen, the well-known moving picture men of Toronto, closed an agreement with O'Brien, Limited, at Renfrew, Ontario, for the control of five theatres in the Ottawa Valley, the transaction being signed on November 21, it was announced at Ottawa.

The five houses are located in large towns outside of Ottawa, the locations being Pembroke, Renfrew, Arnprior, Almonte and Smiths Falls. It is stated that the Allen interests have purchased all but one of these theatres outright, the exception being the theatre at Renfrew, which has been leased from O'Brien, Limited.

It is understood that the five theatres in Eastern Ontario are being added to a new chain of moving picture houses which has been organized by several of the Allens, other theatres of the circuit being located in Toronto, Walkerville and other centres of Western Ontario.

Exhibitors Condemn Buying Entire Outputs

At the last meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware a resolution was unanimously adopted opposing methods used by any organization which attempts to foist on the exhibitor the entire product of a distributor without giving the exhibitor the right to select any part or parts of the product of such corporation, without the necessity of buying the entire output of the distributor.

It was contended that such methods were detrimental to the best interest of the exhibitor. It was recommended as a part of the resolution that exhibitors cease buying product from any exchange or distributing company fostering such methods.

Film Corporation Files Complaint Answer

The Eastern Feature Film Corporation of Boston, through its treasurer, Herman Rifkin, has filed an answer with the Federal Trade Commission to the complaint brought against them with regard to the use of the picture, "The Three Musketeers."

In their answer the Eastern Feature Film Corporation says the contract between the Film Distributors' League, of which they were a member, and the Triangle Film Corporation was canceled on March 6, 1922, and from that time until July 15, 1922, they had a contract direct with the Triangle Film Corporation. The latter contract was canceled July 15. They therefore cannot again show the picture in question, and they claim they have no intention of doing so.

Newspaperman Joins Universal's Publicity Staff

Jack Hyatt, of the New York Evening Journal, has been engaged by the Universal Publicity Department. Hyatt is a newspaper man and free lance writer of many years' experience. Before joining the Journal staff he was on the copy desk of the New York Evening World. He has been associated with various other metropolitan dailies.

Kane Optimistic After Coast Trip

Number of New Theatres and Tendency to Long Runs Cited as Notable

ARTHUR S. KANE, president of Associated Exhibitors, radiated optimism on his return last week to New York following a two-months' tour of the country. What impressed Mr. Kane especially was the number of new theatre buildings in various centers and the building boom particularly noticeable on the Coast. The growing practice of long runs for picture productions was another feature that Mr. Kane cited among his observations. The trip of the Associated Exhibitors executive took him as far south as Los Angeles and as far north as Seattle, Butte and Minneapolis.

As an instance of the increasing tendency towards long runs, Mr. Kane pointed to the three-weeks' engagement of "Grandma's Boy" at Finkelstein & Ruben's Strand in Minneapolis—the first instance of a three-weeks' run in that city, according to Mr. Kane—the four-weeks' showing of this attraction at Heilig theatre, Portland, Ore.; and its nineteen weeks' engagement at the Symphony, Los Angeles. In Los Angeles, the swing towards long runs is particularly strong both among the picture theatres and the stock houses. "Abie's Irish Rose" had reached its thirty-fourth week and "The Rear Car" its fourteenth at the time of his departure from that city, declares Mr. Kane.

Summarizing conditions in various cities which he visited, Mr. Kane said: "In Los Angeles, as I have indicated, business is tremendous in the theatres that show big pictures. That city is experiencing a great building boom, with remarkable activity in the construction of residences. In San Francisco, too, outstanding picture attractions always do a wonderful business. Conditions there are good, although the industry is contending with a vastly increased seating capacity, due to the opening in the last eighteen months of three enormous houses, and the showing of photoplays by the New Curran, a legitimate theatre. That house opened in pictures with 'When Knighthood Was in Flower.'

"Portland, Ore., after a hard summer, is doing a very fine business. Seattle is doing well. The picture theatres in Butte are flourishing better than for two or three years previously."

Among the important developments of Mr. Kane's stay in Los Angeles was the enlistment of a number of big stars under the Associated Exhibitors banner, and the completion of arrangements for several new series of productions for distribution by Associated.

"As I was confident it would," said Mr. Kane, "the announcement that Douglas MacLean will produce four features for Associated has caused us to be deluged with congratulations. All these features will be big comedy specials of the type of 'The Hottentot,' the Thomas H. Ince production soon to be released through First National, and in each of them Mr. MacLean will have all star support. He already holds options on two popular plays and we expect to announce the title of the first production soon. Bogart Rogers is general manager of Mr. MacLean's independent producing organization, Lloyd Ingram, director, and J. R. Crone production manager.

"Associated feels itself peculiarly honored, too, in being the organization which will elevate Madge Bellamy to stardom, a position which exhibitors and the general public agree she is well qualified to occupy. The Bellamy features will be made by the newly formed Regal Pictures, Inc."

Powell Is Selected for Dwan Production

David Powell has been selected to play one of the principal male roles in "The Glimpses of the Moon," an Allan Dwan production which will be started soon at the Paramount Long Island studio. Bebe Daniels and Nita Naldi will have the leading feminine parts in the picture.

Scenes from "Blind Justice," where we find Milton Sills, Carmel Myers, Pat O'Malley, Alec Francis and Jack Mower who appear in the C. C. Burr release, directed by Edward Sloman for Mastadon Films

Harry Rapf Re-engaged by Warner Brothers

Official announcement of the Warner Brothers' production plans for the season of 1923 were made last week by Harry M. Warner. This announcement is the forerunner of a number of other statements relative to the securing of popular plays and books, authors, directors and prominent screen players.

Harry Rapf has been re-engaged for a number of years to produce several productions annually for the Warner organization.

William Beaudine, who directed Barry in "Heroes of the Street," has been engaged to direct three features a year with the "Freckled" star.

Monte Blue, the well known character actor, has been placed under a long term contract to appear exclusively in Warner productions.

J. L. Grauman Will Handle Lichtman Releases

AN important change in the franchise holder for the Al Lichtman Corporation in Wisconsin was announced this week. The Preferred Pictures released by the Lichtman company have heretofore been handled by the F. and R. Film Company, but with their next release, "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," their product will be in the hands of J. L. Grauman, manager of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Wisconsin for that state.

A division of the territory has been made with a view to increasing the distribution of the Lichtman product in Wisconsin. F. and R. Film Company will continue to handle the output in the Dakotas, Minnesota and the upper peninsula of Michigan.

Grauman, who takes over the franchise for his state, is affiliated with the Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, of which J. L. Friedman is president.

Goldwyn Buys Hergesheimer Tale and E. Wallace Novel

GOLDWYN PICTURES has secured the screen rights to Joseph Hergesheimer's "Wild Oranges" and Edgar Wallace's new mystery novel, "Captains of Souls."

"Tol'able David," which was made for the screen by Richard Barthelmess, is one of Hergesheimer's short-stories. Barthelmess has also bought the motion picture rights on his new novel, "The Bright Shawl." "Java Head" is another Hergesheimer story recently adapted for the screen. "Wild Oranges," just purchased by Goldwyn, is one of his earlier short works.

"Captains of Souls," just off the press, is declared to be "a different story with an amazing set of characters." Wallace is an English author with a penchant for mystery tales.

Ibanez Neglects Work to Live Actor's Life

That the picturization of his latest story, "The Enemies of Women," now being made by Cosmopolitan Productions, will be a most magnificent photoplay, following closely his famous story, is the opinion voiced by Blasco Ibanez in a letter sent to Cosmopolitan Productions.

"Lionel Barrymore and Alma Reubens came as the stars," he writes, "and I found the whole company very good.

"For a whole week I abandoned my literary work to live the life of a film actor. I got up at 5 o'clock each morning and at 6 o'clock was at Monte Carlo, where I stayed with the company until night."

Scenes from "Pride of Palomar," a Paramount Picture

Scenes from "Midnight." For release through Producers Security. The co-stars are Henry Hull and Mary Thurman

First National's December List

Neilan and Ince Comedy-Dramas and Morosco and Tully Dramas Scheduled

FIRST NATIONAL announces for release on its December schedule two comedy dramas, Marshall Neilan's "Minnie" and Thomas Ince's "The Hottentot," and two straight dramatic offerings, Oliver Morosco's "Slippy McGee" and Richard Walton Tully's "Omar, the Tentmaker."

Neilan's "Minnie" stars Leatrice Joy and Matt Moore, who are supported by George Barnum, Josephine Crowell, Helen Lynch, Raymond Griffith, Dick Wayne, Tom Wilson and George Dromgold. Frank Y. Urson assisted Neilan in the direction.

Tom Ince features Douglas McLean and Madge Bellamy in his picture, "The Hottentot," a story of horses and horse racing. In this cast are Lila Leslie, Martin Best, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Raymond Hatton, Dwight Crittendon, Harry Booker and Bert Lindley. James W. Horne and Dol Andrews directed under Ince's supervision.

Guy Bates Post is the star in Richard Walton Tully's picture, "Omar the Tentmaker," and will no doubt duplicate the success of "The Masquerader." ## Corinne Griffith's Contract Terminated; New Stars Likely to Be Added

CORINNE GRIFFITH'S contract with Vitagraph has been terminated by mutual consent, it became known during the week in a statement issued from the office of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph organization. Mr. Smith also outlined Vitagraph's plans for the new season, stating that twenty-four special productions are scheduled for release during 1923 and that it was likely that two or three additional stars would be secured for future Vitagraph features.

It was further pointed out that Vitagraph had secured the screen rights to twelve stories and plays, including works of such well-known writers as Ramsay Morris, Emerson Hough, Rupert Hughes, George Barr McCutcheon, James Oliver Curwood, Alfred Henry Lewis and Richard Harding Davis. The acquisition of this screen material is offered as proof of Vitagraph's elaborate production plans for the new year.

Of these new special productions the first, "The Ninety and Nine," a screen adaptation of the stage play by Ramsay Morris, already has been completed under the direction of David Smith.

In addition to the special productions and the star features Vitagraph will continue during the coming year to release the two-reel comedies starring Larry Semon and Jimmy Aubrey. A new comedy by Semon is nearing completion at the west coast studios and will be an early new year release with a comedy by Jimmy Aubrey, recently commenced, to follow soon afterwards.

Vitagraph's activities during the coming year, according to the statement by Mr. Smith, will be further increased "by the distribution of meritorious productions by independent producers." During the present year, Vitagraph undertook successfully to distribute two independent super-features. It also assumed the distribution of six feature comedies, produced by Jess Robbins and adapted from humorous stories by well known writers. The first two were, "Too Much Business" and "The Ladder Jinx." The third of the Jess Robbins' productions, "A Front Page Story," has just been completed at the Hollywood studios and is on its way East for cutting and titling. Vitagraph is also distributing the single-reel Urban Popular Classics, a new subject being released each week.

F. M. Brockell Distribution Manager for First National

F. M. BROCKELL has been appointed Manager of Distribution of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Mr. Brockell's duties will comprise complete supervision over distribution, including sales policies and plans. His appointment is cited in a statement from the First National headquarters as a step towards its policy of centralizing distribution authority.

Mr. Brockell's connection with the industry dates back to the days considerably prior to the organization of the old General Film Company. He first served an apprenticeship in Cincinnati under the tutelage of James Steel. When the General Film, of which he was Cincinnati manager, retired as the dominant factor in motion pictures, Mr. Brockell became an exhibitor, successfully operating two theatres in Cincinnati.

Not long after the organization of Goldwyn he was sent to St. Louis for that company as special representative. Subsequently he went to Seattle in the same capacity, resigning to return to Chicago, where he opened and operated a state right exchange.

Mr. Brockell again joined First National shortly after its reorganization about two and one half years ago. He established the Dallas Exchange and then came into the New York Office to assume the position of superivisor of exchanges, which he held at the time of his appointment as Manager of Distribution.

New Fox Exchange Building Opens

Imposing Buffalo Edifice Marks Birthplace of General Manager Sheehan

MORE than 500 exhibitors from all sections of the United States and Canada, city and state officials, and many men prominent in the film industry attended the musical and dinner which formally opened the new exchange building of the Fox Film Corporation at Buffalo, last Thursday.

The romantic significance which attaches itself to the event lies in the fact that the imposing, two-story edifice is situated on the very site where Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox organization, and Clayton P. Sheehan, district manager, were born. Buffalo newspapers heralded the opening as one of the gala occasions of the year and a large assemblage of Buffalo friends turned out to greet the G. M. on his return to the city to attend the ceremonies.

The other Sheehan brothers present were, Howard J. of San Francisco, and Norman C. of the Buffalo office.

Telegrams congratulating the organization came from every center in the world where motion pictures are known. Theatre owners in Mexico, Japan, China, Australia, and England cabled their best wishes.

Governor-elect Alfred E. Smith headed a distinguished list of state and national officers and notable men and women of the state who sent their congratulations.

Among these was Will Hays who expressed his regrets at being unable to be present and extended his personal well wishes.

Governor Smith's telegram was a gracious compliment to General Manager Sheehan. The wire read as follows:

"The already well-developed world-wide scope and great influence of Fox Film Corporation make its activities of value and growth and success could be presented than the extension of your business in the great city of Buffalo, which you, as a native son, have so signally honored by your own individual and distinguished success in the motion picture world. Upon the opening of your new exchange building, permit me to felicitate you and wish you the continuance of the success which your devoted and conscientious efforts to entertain and enlighten the public deserve. Good luck and kind personal well wishes and congratulations."

The new building of the Fox Exchange was handsomely decorated, and lively music was furnished while throngs circulated through the building. An excellent musical program was furnished under the direction of Manager Charles N. Johnston and Frank A. Tierney, of the executive force of Mr. Sheehan's office of New York City, presided.

Another feature of the opening was the fact that it also came as a farewell to Clayton P. Sheehan who sailed on Saturday for South America to make an extensive tour through the countries of the southern continent in behalf of Fox interests. He will return about March 1. Fox Film Corporation hopes through the missionary work of Mr. Sheehan and other Fox representatives to bring about a closer mutual interest between this nation and the South American governments.

UNIVERSAL announces the purchase, for future screen production, of Frances Hodgson's "A Lady of Quality" and Kate L. McLaurin's stage success, "The Six-Fifty," which was given in New York last year. Priscilla Dean will be starred in "A Lady of Quality" and will be made into a Universal-Jewel production. The star of "The Six-Fifty" has not yet been definitely selected but Virginia Valli is the likely choice. An all-star cast with featured players is another possible course under consideration.

"A Lady of Quality," besides being widely read as a novel, was dramatized with Julia Arthur as the star. The part of Chlorinda, which proved such a sensation with the reading public at a time when "the new woman" was a burning topic of discussion, is said to be admirably suited to Miss Dean.

"The Six-Fifty," when produced at the Hudson theatre by Lee Kugel, received favorite notice at the hands of the reviewers. It is a comedy drama in three acts. The story deals with a young civil engineer and his wife who are obliged to go back to the farm. Her only excitement in life is in watching the 6:50 express rush by. How a train wreck brings adventure to their doors and results in dramatic complications forms the motivating force of the plot.

Continuing, Kinematograh says:

"One may, of course, have to qualify the foregoing statement of the American attitude if W. A. Johnston, of the Motion Picture News, correctly reflects general opinion in his comment on the situation under the heading of "Politics" in the News, of November 11. Johnston casts doubts on the story that a "plot" existed to assist the re-election of the Republican Government by a screen campaign, and while supporting the Trade's right to use its screens for the presentation of arguments against censorship, strongly opposes its right to champion any individual's candidature. 'The screen,' he very soundly remarks, 'is for principles—not politics.' The remark is as true of this country as of America."

Old Studio Reopens in Massachusetts Town

The Atlas Studio in Newton Highlands, Mass., built several years ago for a company that thrived for awhile and then went under, has recently been the scene of great activity again. Some of the townspeople liked it and others did not, but the fact remains that a new picture has just been completed there, and rumor has it that it is a very good one.

Ida Harrison, of the Pictures-in-Motion, Inc., and author of "The Soul Call," has just completed that film in the aforementioned locality. It was directed by L. E. Dadmun.

Heading the cast is Edward Earle.

Abbey Pictures Enters Independent Ranks

Abbey Pictures, Incorporated, is the latest newcomer to the ranks of independent film producers.

The company, which is headed by John A. Murphy as president, and Morris Kriger, as chief of the production staff has about completed plans for their initial screen offering, from the pen of Lola Lee.

President Murphy, of Abbey Pictures, Inc., comes fresh to the film world after a successful term in the legitimate ranks where he has staged and sponsored many worthwhile theatrical pieces, in the past fifteen years. His associate Maurice Kriger is well known to the trade in general, having at various times held important executive positions with Triangle, S. J. Lynch Enterprises, Universal and others of renown.

The first production of the new company will shortly be started.

Chase Named Universal European Manager

Maurice A. Chase, who has been Eastern Division sales manager for Universal during the past twelve months, will leave New York aboard the Aquitania early in December to be General Manager for Universal in Continental Europe. He will be a liaison man between Universal and its European exchanges. His territory will embrace all European countries except the British Isles.

Universal's European business has become so great in the last year that it has become necessary to have closer co-operation between the various exchanges on the Continent and the home office in America, it is explained by James V. Bryson, Universal export manager.

Joseph Henabery is now making interiors for "The Tiger's Claw," starring Jack Holt. The continuity is by Jack Cunningham, and Eva Novak will appear in the leading feminine role.

Dorothy Dalton is expected Tuesday from New York and will begin "The Law of the Lawless," by Konrad Bercovici, under the direction of Victor Fleming. Charles Deroche will play opposite the star.

Betty Compson and "The White Flower" troupe arrived from Honolulu Thursday.

"The Ten Commandments" has been selected as the title for DeMille's production to follow "Adam's Rib." This title was suggested by a recent idea contest, conducted by DeMille and the Los Angeles Times. More than thirty thousand suggestions were received.

In production are "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," starring Wallace Reid, under direction of Wesley Ruggles; "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," starring Mary Miles Minter, under the direction of Charles Maigne; "Bella Donna," the George Fitzmaurice production, starring Pola Negri, and "Prodigal Daughters," with Gloria Swanson the star and Sam Wood director.

Production of "The Glimpses of the Moon," Edith Wharton's popular novel, which is being translated to the screen by Allan Dwan, was started at the Paramount Long Island studio last week in a blaze of color and an investiture of exotic drapings.

Claire Windsor has been chosen for the role of Patricia in George Fitzmaurice's production of "Bella Donna," in which Pola Negri makes her American stellar debut for Paramount. With Conway Tearle, Conrad Nagel, Miss Windsor, Macey Harlam and Claude King in the cast, Miss Negri's support, Paramount points out, comes about as near to being all-star as is possible.

Bebe Daniels, who is to be featured with Nita Naldi in Allan Dwan's Paramount picture, "The Glimpses of the Moon," which has just been put into production at the Long Island studio, is ill at her hotel in New York from the effects of the extraction of two wisdom teeth.

Myron Selznick is now making plans for the production of "The Common Law," by Robert W. Chambers, which will embrace an all-star cast.

It is probable that Theda Bara will journey westward to play the leading role in "The Easiest Way," the Eugene Walters play, which was originally produced by David Belasco.

The Jackie Coogan company has a mammoth "circus set" erected for the "Toby Tyler" production, now being directed by Eddie Cline.

The Talmadges, Norma and Constance, are expected on the Coast the 10th of December.

Griffith production, of which Dr. Goodwin was the author, entitled "The Battle of the Sexes."

Lucille Carlisle, leading woman for Larry Semon in nearly all of the recent Vitigraph comedies, arrived in New York on Thursday from Hollywood, Cal., for a brief visit. She is accompanied by her sister, Helen Carlisle, who has been in the West for a year or more writing special articles for the motion picture fan publications.

Frank Lawrence has been engaged to cut and edit the next Allan Holubar picture, "The White Frontier," starring Dorothy Phillips, and the new Maurice Tourneur production, "The Isle of Dead Ships," both of which are being made at the United studios. Lawrence is one of the best known film editors. Both of these pictures are for First National release.

Doris Hill of San Francisco, who won a "Movie Opportunity" contest undertaken by a San Francisco newspaper in conjunction with Allan Holubar productions will probably have a small part in Mr. Holubar's new production, "The White Frontier," starring Dorothy Phillips, now in the making for First National release. Miss Hill captured the contest because of her "beauty, intelligence and training," but has been undecided since whether she will take up pictures as a career. At present she is visiting Miss Phillips in Los Angeles.

Among the Exchanges

A PROMOTION, which meets with the hearty approval of exchange men and theatre owners in the Chicago territory, is that of Jack Sampson as manager of Film Booking Offices Chicago exchange, to fill the vacancy caused by the return of Joseph Klein to the New York headquarters of the company. Mr. Sampson, for some time past, has been sales manager at Film Booking Offices and previous to that was, for several years, connected with Universal's Chicago exchange.

Si Greiver, of Greiver Productions, has purchased two strong western features from Irving Lesser, for release in the Chicago territory. They are "The Sagebrush Trail," with a cast including Roy Stewart, Marjorie Daw, Wallace Beery and Johnnie Walker, and a Curwood picture, "The Man From Hell River," played by Eva Novak, Wallace Beery and an all-star cast.

Manager Ralph Simmons, of Hodkinson, went to Rock Island, for the opening of Irene Castle in "Slim Shoulders," which will be presented in conjunction with Miss Castle's Fashion Parade, starting December 2 at the Fort Armstrong. Joe Hopp is giving the public of this river city some big productions this year, recently having shown "The Sign of the Rose" at his house, George Beban also appearing personally with his play of the same name. The Beban attraction proved a box office success and Mr. Hopp is counting on doing a big business with the Castle show. Mr. Simmons is planning a big selling and exploitation campaign to put over some of the important Hodkinson features, which will be released within the next few weeks, including "Bull Dog Drummond," "The Kingdom Within," and "Dollar Devils."

William C. Cook, popular First National salesman, who has been covering western Illinois territory, has been transferred to Chicago, and M. Whitemoyer, who has been working on special assignment, will look after Mr. Cook's former territory. Phil Dunas is now working suburban cities.

Maurice Hellman left for a two weeks' visit to New York, on Wednesday, and while in the eastern film center, will make his headquarters at the Elks Club. It is understood that Mr. Hellman is working on plans which will make him an important figure in the independent field, not only in Chicago, but throughout the country.

Charlie Lundgrin, well-known Hodkinson salesman, is the latest of the film row eligibles to embark on the matrimonial sea. He is scheduled to marry a popular Racine, Wis., girl on Wednesday.

Richard Kipling, of Kipling Enterprises, reports several sales of features for state right and foreign territories. "Golden Silence," his five reel feature, starring Hedda Nova and Jack Perin, has been taken over by Chester Sawyer, of the Carribean Films, for South America and Cuba.

"The Man - Hunter," "Gringo Devil" and "Golden Silence," have been purchased by Reece and Fields, owners of Rialto Productions for the state of New York and northern New Jersey, and six of the Kipling productions go to Tom Leonard, of St. Louis, for distribution in eastern Missouri and southern Illinois.

Mr. Kipling is completing plans for the production of "The Face Upon the Floor," on the west coast, starting the middle of January, and intends, hereafter, to produce from two to four big pictures a year, as it is his belief that the day of the mediocre or ordinary program picture is past, and that the public, and therefore exhibitors, demand high-grade features.

Mr. Kipling is also planning the production and distribution of twenty-six short novelty reels, "Budville Fables," and has already completed four of these five-hundred-foot reels.

H. E. Belford has joined the sales staff of Vitagraph, and has been assigned to Indiana territory by Manager Steinson. Mr. Belford, for the past year, has been general representative for Richard Kipling with headquarters in Chicago.

One of the latest recruits to the staff of the American Releasing Corporation, is Alma Jose.

W. H. Tracy, hustling Universal salesman, is making his rounds these days in an auto, which is a traveling advertisement of "Around the World in Eighteen Days." His flivver is fully equipped with camping paraphernalia and covered with mud and dust, bears a sign, "Am Going Around the World in Eighteen Days." Needless to say the car is attracting a lot of attention.

I. Lesserman, of Universal, made a trip to New York last week for a conference with President Carl Laemmle and home office officials. Judging from the smile Mr. Lesserman wore on his return, the trip must have been eminently satisfactory to him.

Ben Garretson is once again handling exploitation for Pathe and is specializing on some live stunts for putting over "Nanook of the North."

The regular weekly trade and press showings of Universal pictures were resumed last week and will be held each week, hereafter, at 1.30 P. M. every Friday in Universal's Projection Room, at 831 South Wabash, according to Sales Manager Herman Stern.

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford passed through Chicago last week en route to the west coast, and tarried long enough for Mary to personally sign a contract with Balaban & Katz for the showing of her next big release, "Tess of the Storm Country," in Balaban & Katz's houses.

Dr. Shallenberger, of the Arrow Film Corporation, recently spent several days in Chicago, conferring with Frank Zambreno, of the Progress Pictures Company, and arranging for the exploitation of Arrow's widely heralded specials, "Streets of New York," and "Night Life in Hollywood." Mr. Zambreno, it is understood, plans to put these pictures over with an advertising campaign which will be the biggest he has ever attempted, including a large number of twenty-four sheet stands, newspaper advertising and tie-ups, two of which already have been made with the Art Institute of Chicago and the City Council. Albert Dezel will handle the campaign.

Branch Manager Bolle and Sales Manager Wallace, are scheduled to return to Chicago the end of the week with the Paramount party, which has been attending the company's annual convention at Los Angeles. On Friday a meeting of the sales forces of Paramount exchanges at Milwaukee, Peoria, and Chicago will be held in Chicago, and it is expected that some of the home office officials, who are included in the convention party, will remain over for the meeting.

Around the Trade

"THE PACE OF PROGRESS," a one-reel picture showing the development of transportation from the days of the Indians to the present time, is meeting with great success in the Chicago and Milwaukee territories, as the scenes of the picture were shot at locations in and between the two cities, and in addition to entertainment value, this short feature has a strong local interest. It has been used in more than two hundred Chicago and suburban theatres to date. The scenario was written by J. J. Moran, of the North Shore Electric Railway and produced under his supervision.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have moved their general offices from the Rialto Theatre Building, where they have been located for many years, to spacious quarters in the New McVicker's Theatre Building, the entire third floor of which will be devoted to offices, including private offices for the three members of the firm and Norman E. Field, general manager; John J. Jones, booking manager; a conference chamber, and stenographer's room. The fourth floor will house Ralph T. Kettering, general representative, and his staff, the auditing department, and the projection room, where all pictures will be reviewed before being run on the McVicker's screen.

The first of Paramount's stars to make personal appearances at McVicker's Theatre, under the policy recently announced by President Zukor, of Paramount, of having all his company's stars traveling east and west, stop over in Chicago for this purpose, was Miss Dorothy Dalton, who appeared at the new house last week. George Fawcett, whose splendid portrayal of the stern old father in "The Old Homestead," was a memorable piece of acting, and Jacqueline Logan, one of the daintiest and most attractive Paramount stars, were also booked to appear on the stage of McVicker's in person this week.

Eddie Hafercamp has returned from Erie, Pennsylvania, where he completed arrangements for the purchase of an organ, which will be installed in the theatre he is erecting at Crawford and Elston Avenues, and which he is having rushed to completion so it can be opened by January 1st.

Max Schwartz and his associates plan to open the Albany Park Theatre the latter part of the present week. This house has been completely remodeled, newly furnished and decorated and today is one of the finest outlying movie theatres in the city.

Enid Bennett Selected For Leading Role

Enid Bennett has been signed by Arthur Sawyer of S-L (Sawyer-Lubin) pictures to enact the leading feminine role in the Metro-S-L production of "Your Friend and Mine. Filming of this Willard Mack sketch is to be started within the next ten days at the Metro studios in Hollywood under the direction of Clarence G. Badger.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Impossible Mrs. Bellew—
Good picture that went over well with our houses. (West.)

Strong feature and Gloria Swanson is seen to best advantage for some time. Business excellent. (Middle West.)

Manslaughter—
One of the big features of the year. Business not so good first part of the week, but played to crowds from the middle of the week on.

The Man Who Saw Tomorrow—
Meighan a favorite who always brings good business and usually a good picture. My attendance liked this one. (West.)

Thomas Meighan is a great favorite here. This one drew good for a week. (Middle West.)

The Young Rajah—
This one went over big for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Good picture and drew well for a two weeks' run. (Middle West.)

To Have and to Hold—
Fine picture; drew well and seemed to please. (Middle West.)

Fine drama, beautifully portrayed. Well known title drew the crowds and fine production kept them coming all week. One of the big pictures of the year. (Middle West.)

The Loves of Pharaoh—
Patrons seemed to like it. Should go over if properly exploited. (Middle West.)

Anna Ascends—
Only fair picture and business rather dull. (East.)

Pink Gods—

Clarence—
Patrons did not enthuse much over this offering and business tapered off from the average.

On the High Seas—
An entertaining production of just the calibre to please audiences that attend this house. Box office receipts unusually good.

When Knighthood Was in Flower—
One of the few pictures that has ever held over here for more than two weeks. Business capacity. (West.)

The Cowboy and the Lady—
Did fairly well. Average picture. (West.)

The Old Homestead—
Could do business every day in the year with pictures like this one. Have packed them in since the opening. (West.)

UNIVERSAL

Broad Daylight—
Put on for week run with "Wolf Law" another Universal production and fair business recorded. A lot of show for little money helped pull them in. (East).

The Storm—
Proved winning bill for opening of new house. Good attendance throughout the week. Critics and patrons praised it. (Middle West.)

Under Two Flags—
A thrilling story, beautiful pictures, excitement galore. Best recipe for lagging business. Priscilla Dean won new admirers among my patrons by her work in this feature. It is a very pleasing adaptation of a word famous novel and should prove winner anywhere. (Middle West.)

The Kentucky Derby—

Drew crowds who seemed to like it. (West.)

Did good week with all "southern" bill. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Lorna Doone—
Crowds were enthusiastic about this feature. Although there was considerable comment when it was first announced as coming, on account of many who held the book a favorite, it was supposed that it would draw highbrows, mainly. Interest in the picture was built up ahead of time through newspapers and did fine business. Many expressed themselves that it was one of the best pictures of the year. (Middle West.)

Attractive display by the Princess theatre, Toledo, O., on "The Face in the Fog."

The Eternal Flame—
Good picture and business up to par. (East.)

Trouble—
Fair picture, but did not go over very well here. (East.)

The Deuce of Spades—
Picture mediocre and business only fair. (East.)

White Shoulders—
Pleasing but nothing unusual. Average business. Whatever business we had depended upon the star's popularity. (Middle West.)

METRO

Broadway Rose—
Went across fairly well. Mae Murray has done better work. Good attendance. (Middle West.)

Trifling Women—
Big box office attraction. Splendid production with theme of popular interest. Played two weeks and held up fine. (Middle West.)

FOX

Nero—
Good picture but business not as good as expected. (East.)

People seem to be tired of hearing how big a picture it is and how many people there are in it. Anyway, it didn't seem to attract well, although those who did come, seemed satisfied. Might do exceptional business somewhere. (Middle West.)

The New Teacher—
Just an average program subject that got by because of the rest of the bill being strong. (East.)

Without Compromise—
Fair all the way through. Farnum in leading role attracted some comment, but as a whole the production did not score big here. (Middle West.)

A Fool There Was—
A good box office attraction. Lively week's attendance. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

A Rogue's Romance—
A fair sort of picture that Valentino's present popularity makes a winner. Nice receipts. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Slim Shoulders—
In spite of revue and two special revue nights of a flapper revue and a kiddies revue, with local contestants, business was not so good. It is a question whether it was good business to suggest by the advertising that Irene Castle herself would be with the revue. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Sherlock Holmes—
This one won much praise from the newspapers and played to good crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

Reckless Youth—
Pleasant little feature that did very well. Star seems popular and story seemed to amuse. Business satisfactory. (Middle West.)

F. B. O.

If I Were Queen—
Big show. Big crowds. Everybody pleased. (Middle West.)

AL LICHTMAN

Rich Men's Wives—
Fine society picture with plenty of heart interest. Went over big. (Middle West.)

Shadows—
Well acted picture and went over big, partly due to extensive advertising campaign. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Tess o' the Storm Country—
Whale of a picture. Business just as big. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Sure Fire Flint—
Plenty of pep and dash and the kind of picture that the majority of movie fans want. Not a bit sorry I booked it. (Middle West.)
It is "sure fire" enough. They liked it. (West.)

The Man From Hell's River—
Northern picture which followed a couple of animal pictures the week before. Business was all right for the first day but did not hold out for the week. Took it off in the middle of the week. (Middle West.)

What's Wrong With the Women?—
Only a fair picture and box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Paul E. Noble's Striking "Broadway Rose" Lobby

Striking lobby display on "Broadway Rose" prepared by Paul A. Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland. A cameo effect was obtained by setting cutouts out from the background. Old rose, pale green and gold was the color scheme followed

Animated Cut-out Attracts Eye to "Manslaughter" Lobby

WACO, TEXAS.—A lobby display with high attraction value was arranged by Manager J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome theatre, on "Manslaughter."

Set back in the lobby about ten feet stood a cut-out of Leatrice Joy with a miniature display at the foot of this cut-out. Mr. Harrison "dressed up" the cut-out in flashy colors, using a blood red velvet dress with a bright green sash around the waist. This gave a real cabaret effect. The arm of the cut-out moved up and down. This was effected by means of a piece of machinery.

In the hand of this moving arm was a small wine glass, the glass was real and in it was a red liquid representing wine. As the arm moved up and down the liquid was seen to move, and Mr. Harrison writes that "animating the inanimate" attracted considerable attention.

Manager Barry Burke of the Palace theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, built this miniature cabin in the lobby during the run of "The Storm," snow being represented by cotton

Newspaper Herald Is Issued on "Rags to Riches"

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.—Manager A. H. McLaughlin of the Criterion theatre printed big heralds of newspaper size, modeled after the four-page broadside in the pressbook, for putting over "Rags to Riches."

Features stories and cuts were used, many of them centering about famous men who had risen from rags to riches. This proved an attractive tie-up on the picture and aroused considerable interest in it.

Traffic Cards Hooked Up With "Young Rajah" Showing

NORFOLK, VA.—Every telephone pole and traffic semaphore was obtained by Leslie Whelan, Paramount exploiteer, for the billing of "The Young Rajah" when that picture played the Granby theatre, through a tie-up which gave the city its money's worth.

Remembering that the "Manslaughter" tie-ups brought so many excellent locations, the Granby printed up cards reading:

"Warning! Pedestrians have the right of way at this crossing."

Then followed the billing for the picture.

The theatre had to stand the cost of the cards, but the city let them have wonderful locations.

Fire Department Tie-Up Wins Publicity for "Nero"

Wichita Falls, Texas.—An unusual street ballyhoo was obtained on "Nero" when the management of the Strand theatre went out and obtained the assistance of the local fire department with the result that five fire trucks and a chief's machine paraded about the city bearing "Nero" banners.

The plan was that of naming a "Fireman's Day" in which all local firemen were invited to see the picture as guests of the theatre. By thus gaining the good will of the department, the fire-fighters were willing to carry banners on their trucks in their drive to the theatre. The signs on each truck read: "We Are Going to See 'Nero'—the Burning of Rome."

Men's Style Show Is Held with "A Tailor Made Man"

AUSTIN, TEXAS.—A showing of men's clothing was held as a special feature in connection with the showing of "A Tailor Made Man" at the Majestic theatre by Manager R. P. Whitfield.

Harrell's Clothing Store furnished the models and clothes on display. These models were talented young men who not only displayed the latest fashions in men's clothes but rendered songs and dances. The local store that tied up with the theatre also furnished an additional act for the style show. The Longhorn Quartet from the local university, dressed in Harrell's latest styles, offered selections that were pleasing to all.

Another angle of the tie-up was a window display. Morning, afternoon and evening dress for men were on exhibit. Cut-outs of Charles Ray, special announcement cards and 22 x 28 framed photographs showing scenes from the picture were in the window.

Manager Oscar White of the Rex theatre, Sumter, S. C., got up this miniature display on "The Fast Mail," the background being an exact replica of the main street of Sumter

Varied Stunts Are Put Over In "Monte Cristo" Campaign

Winnipeg, Canada.—The management of the Lyceum theatre put over a campaign on "Monte Cristo" which included a number of unusual stunts.

A few days before the initial opening arrangements were made with the Free Press, one of the leading papers of Winnipeg, by which the paper, which conducts regular nightly radio concerts, undertook to broadcast the radio message, "Monte Cristo Is Coming." This was followed up by having a fancy skater, dressed as Monte Cristo, give exhibitions during intervals in the big Cleveland-Winnipeg games at the skating rink and throwing "Monte Cristo" coins among the crowd, a stunt which the sports committee at first objected to but later acquiesced in.

Excellent publicity was also obtained by linking up with three of the leading drug stores in Winnipeg, using the slogan: "A Treasure of Economy in Every Purchase."

Permission was obtained from the Standard Bank of Canada to place cards in prominent positions in its several branches. These read: "The Wealthiest Men in the World Have Been the Thriftiest—Start Saving and One Day You Will Be able to Cry, 'The World Is Mine.'"

Further publicity was obtained by tie-ups with book and jewelry stores, the most prominent in the city, one of the latter displaying a perfect miniature stage setting of "Monte Cristo" discovering the treasure, real diamonds and other precious stones being used by the jewelers.

Jackie Coogan Birthday Party Held at Theatre

LEXINGTON, Ky.—A Jackie Coogan birthday party was given by Managers Egar and Russell of the Kentucky theatre on the date on which they played "Oliver Twist," to which his youthful admirers were invited.

The "kick" in the celebration consisted of a birthday cake baked by the Barker System which was displayed in the window several days in advance of the party.

It is estimated that some 500 children were on hand for the special party.

Novel Co-operative Ad Put Over on $5 Baby"

LORAIN, Ohio.—Peter Theopopilis, of the Patheon theatre, pulled a most successful $5 Baby stunt in connection with his recent showing of the feature of that name. In a half-page ad appearing in the Lorain Times-Herald, Theopopolis announced that he would give five dollars to the first baby born the week that "The $5 Baby" played at his theatre.

The rest of the page was given over to co-operative advertising. One concern offered to pay $5 toward the first baby carriage purchased that week. The People's Savings Bank offered to give $5 toward the account of the first Baby depositor. A specialty store donated $5 worth of infant's wear to the first baby outfit purchased.

Kindness Contest Used as Aid to "Human Hearts" Showing

EAST ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Manager Harry Redmond of the Majestic theatre put over a campaign on "Human Hearts" in excellent shape.

First, he hooked up with the East St. Louis Daily Journal, the city's only daily newspaper, for a human heart contest, prizes being awarded daily for 15 days for the best stories of human kindness. The grand prize was a silver mesh bag, with daily prizes of $1 and tickets to the show.

"Pink Gods" Lobby Display Is Given Police Guard

MUSKOGEE, OKLA.—Manager Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace theatre, used the diamond display idea on "Pink Gods," but got additional publicity value from it through a police guard.

Diamonds were displayed in the window of the jewelry store, together with small hand-painted cut-outs of Bebe Daniels and neatly designed window cards. In the centre of this window display was a pink diamond, and just behind it stood a card telling the public to be sure and see the $3,000 display at the Palace theatre.

In the lobby of the Palace theatre was an attractive display of diamonds. The stones were valuable and there was one diamond, a pink one in color, that was valued at $3,000. These stones were locked in a glass case. Just behind this display was a large cut-out of a diamond lettered "Pink Gods." Since the beaver board display carried real diamonds, the jewelry store furnished a policeman who stood guarding the precious stones for three days. The display went out at 3 P. M. and remained in the lobby until 9 P. M. It was then removed to the jewelry store and locked in the vault. The newspapers gave this unusual stunt special stories and the jewelry store advertised the picture in connection with their regular ads.

Manager Harry B. Watts of the Strand theatre, Omaha, Neb., used tinsel and Chinese lanterns to produce this novel effect in his lobby on "East is West"

The Empire theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., used this lobby display during the run of "Rags to Riches." Half the letters were in rags, the other half in gold

"Rags to Riches" Exploited at Football Game

Syracuse, N. Y.—An extensive advertising and publicity campaign was staged by the Empire theatre on "Rags to Riches" recently.

Tie-ups with a number of stores for counter and window displays were secured with the Barry cut-out cards; thousands of heralds were distributed broadcast, and the Warner float paraded the streets of Syracuse for several days.

An opportunity presented itself to exploit the feature during the Syracuse-Nebraska football game at which were present 25,000 people. One of the local papers sponsored a special newsboy matinee, and it is said that fully 1,500 newsboys were given an opportunity to see the picture on a Saturday morning.

Clear across the width of the lobby was hung a clothes line containing raggedy clothes and clothes worn by a wealthy boy. On the clothes were placed gold letters so that the word "Rags" represented the worn garments and "Riches" the new clothes.

Doorknob hangers and a number of other accessories were distributed and helped materially in putting the picture over.

Co-operative Ads Given New Slant Through Prizes

TAMPA, Fla.—C. D. Cooley, general manager of the Consolidated Amusement company, put over page co-operative ads on "To Have and to Hold" at the Victory theatre with a new angle.

Using a full page in each of the local papers, he headed it in large letters, "Win Free Theatre Tickets." An explanation of the plan is then given. The readers are requested to make up a list of words, using only the letters, and the same number of each, as found in the title of the picture, "To Have and to Told."

For every list of 100 words, one prize is given. For 150 words, a larger prize, and for 199 words, a still larger. As a special boost to the merchants who advertise on the page, the winners are instructed to clip the ad of the merchant they prefer to go to, pin the ad to their list and present it to that store, who will furnish them with the prize they are entitled to.

"Young Rajah" Given Fortune Teller Ballyhoo

New London, Conn.—A ballyhoo representing an Indian fortune teller was a feature of the campaign on "The Young Rajah," put over by Walter Murphy of the Crown theatre.

With the co-operation of Russell B. Moon, Paramount exploiteer, a cigar store window was secured and the dressed-up ballyhoo sat in it, playing cards on a little table. As soon as a crowd collected he began to show them some twenty stills of the picture.

This performance was sure to get a crowd, and then he stepped out a moment and distributed a herald folded so that one side read: "Your prophecy foretold." Inside was a fake message leading into advertising for the picture.

Mr. Murphy's lobby was decorated in red and green with the mammoth head of Valentino cut-out of the 24-sheet displayed on the marquee.

Two life-size cut-outs taken from the stock Paramount six-sheet flanked the lobby.

Varied "Clarence" Campaign Is Staged at St. Louis

St. Louis, Mo.—An exploitation campaign which included tie-ups with three newspapers was put over on "Clarence" for its showing at the Missouri theatre by Manager Herschel Stuart and Edwin Olmstead, advertising and publicity manager.

The St. Louis Star sponsored a free children's matinee on Saturday morning, the opening day of the picture, for children under 12 years of age. The St. Louis Times sponsored a matinee for the pupils of Clarence School, on Clarence Street. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat ran a coupon which when filled in would admit any Clarence free on a certain day.

Chain letters were sent to all the Clarences in the telephone book protesting against the slurring of the name. A street ballyhoo was used, wearing the same costume as Clarence in the picture, with a saxophone and a card on his back reading: "I am Clarence; meet me at the Missouri theatre this week."

Booklet Helps to Sell Theatre to Middletown Fans

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.—Sigmund Schlenger, proprietor of the Grand theatre, recently issued a neat 16-page booklet, setting forth the merits of the theatre, and helping to put over the idea that it was a community institution, run for the public good.

Ten reasons were set forth, including the various details of projection, such as the screen used, projection equipment, pictures, ventilating system, music, service, and the like, why the entertainments at the Grand were presented in the best possible manner.

"Robin Hood" Given Tie-Up As Lesson In Schools

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The press department on "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" has effected a tie-up with public schools in New York and Brooklyn which is getting some unusual publicity for the picture.

Three-sheets and one-sheets on the production, together with stills, are supplied the teachers who handle the subject of English history. As "Robin Hood" is part of every youngster's education, the tie-up enhances to a considerable extent the interest among the scholars in lessons touching on this subject.

Arrangements have also been perfected for a lecture in public schools on the subject of "Robin Hood," illustrated by a series of 75 colored slides depicting scenes from the Fairbanks picture.

Front on "The Delicious Little Devil" at the Strand theatre, Memphis, Tenn., arranged by Manager H. B. Clarke, in yellow and orange

Calling Card Stunt Is Revived for "The Masquerader"

DUBUQUE, Iowa.—Calling cards for Guy Bates Post as an exploitation stunt on "The Masquerader" were used in conjunction with the showing at the Grand theatre.

In Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah, they bore the inscription "Over" and on the reverse was written in "Called but you were out."

Load of Desert Sand Ballyhoos "When the Desert Calls"

NEW YORK, N. Y.—An effective street ballyhoo was used by the B. S. Moss Cameo theatre and the publicity department of Pyramid Pictures for the showing at that theatre of "When the Desert Calls."

A typical sand truck, driven by mules, carrying a big load of sand, was effectively placarded with signs reading: "This is Sahara Desert sand, as shown in the Pyramid picture, 'When the Desert Calls,' now playing at the Cameo theatre. Five dollar gold pieces and other U. S. coins—real money—are buried in this sand. You are welcome to come up and dig for the money, which is yours when you find it."

A second truck was similarly equipped and sent to visit many of the schools in Greater New York, where hundreds of eager youngsters swarmed on to the truck and dug into the sand with vengeance.

The other truck made stops in the bustling Times Square and shopping districts.

At Times Square, when the street swarmed with the usual Saturday matinee crowds, a regrettable accident occurred with this truck. A young woman, a little too anxious to race across the thoroughfare to keep an appointment, got directly under the heels of the mules. The driver pulled hard on the mules and the truck swayed dangerously, fell to one side, the sand being dumped directly on the car tracks.

The sign on the truck, reading " . . . five dollar gold pieces and other U. S. coins are buried in this sand," caused pandemonium, and, with a mad rush, men and women alike dug into the sand. Many found five dollar gold pieces. Others coins of smaller value.

For an hour and a half, during the greatest Saturday rush period, traffic was held up at New York's most important corner, while pedestrians dug with much laughter.

Timely Arrest Gets Publicity For "Name of the Law"

GREENSBURG, PA.—Frank Leonard, exploitation man for "In the Name of the Law," got front page space in all three newspapers here recently through a timely arrest in which he had a hand.

He was standing on the street, talking to the police chief, when word came that there were two colored hold-up men in a local store. The chief went to the store and made the arrest, accompanied by Leonard. The two men then attempted to escape, but Leonard prevented this. He then wrote eye-witness accounts of the affair for all three papers, giving the chief all the credit, and the newspapers permitted him to make generous mention of "In the Name of the Law" in the opening of the stories.

Miniature Picture Screen Used to Exploit "Silver Wings"

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—The management of the American theatre used a window display which attracted great attention recently during the engagement of "Silver Wings."

On a stand in the window was erected a miniature stage, in the back of which was a small motion picture screen. To the rear of the screen was placed a projection machine, which intermittently flashed scenes from the picture at the American.

Photos of Mary Carr, enlarged stills, posters and framed placards were stationed about the little stage. The entire setting had a black velvet covering for a background.

Window display of food-stuffs obtained on "Lorna Doone" by Julius K. Johnston, manager of the Rialto theatre, Omaha, Nebr.

Clarence Crusade Brings Wide Publicity to "Clarence"

DENVER, COL.—Homer Ellison, manager of the Princess theatre, and Rick Ricketson, Paramount exploiteer, utilized the fact that most Clarences are sensitive about their name to put over an excellent publicity campaign on "Clarence."

They found a well-known citizen named Clarence Brennan, who, for reasons of his own, wanted a lot of personal publicity. Brennan printed a letter head which was captioned: "The Crusade of Crucified Clarences," and which announced the purpose of the organization as follows:

"Devoted to the defence of good men unfortunately named 'Clarence' to the restriction of the name where anything else can be substituted, and the advancement of legislation to prevent parents from committing this crime against their new-born. Membership limited to 'he-men' struggling against great odds under the handicap of Clarence."

Working with Ricketson, Brennan communicated with every Paramount exhibitor in the Denver territory who had booked the picture. He asked them to obtain the names and addresses of every man named Clarence in the town.

To them he wrote a personal letter asking them to join his movement to prevent by law parents naming their children with the fatal monicker.

Brennan saw that every newspaper was informed of the Crusade of Crucified Clarences and a lot of publicity and laughs resulted.

"Traffic Signs Tied Up with "Turn to the Right"

CENTRAL CITY, Ky.—In exploiting "Turn to the Right," Manager Jack B. Jourdaine of the Selba theatre, effected a good tieup through the use of traffic signals, placed in important intersections on the main streets of the city. Each of these traffic posts called attention to the speed limits of Central City, and directed traffic to "Turn to the Right" to the Selba theatre.

"I Am the Law" Publicity Gets Front Page Position

Passaic, N. J.—Will Kraft, advertising and exploitation man for Weber & North, got onto the front page of the leading dailies in New York City and New Jersey with publicity for "I Am the Law," when that picture was booked for the Rialto. His story also went out over the Associated Press wire.

The feature was scheduled to open Friday. The day before, Kraft showed the feature to the inmates of the Passaic almshouse. This was the first time that the aged occupants of the institution had seen a movie. The generosity of the Rialto in bringing a picture to the poor won a liberal advance story in the local press the day before the picture opened.

On Friday, the day of the opening, the newspapers of Passaic came out with a story of the sensational escape of four of the inmates of the almshouse. As the story ran, these four men, 65 years old, had seen a thrilling picture of the Northwest, "I Am the Law," the night before at the almshouse. They had never before seen a movie in their life. It was only natural that they mistook the screen characters for real people. When the picture was over, the men were puzzled. "Where did that villain in the picture go to?" they asked.

They looked behind the screen—the villain was not there. So they grabbed some rusty rifles and fared forth in the open country, leaving a note, "We won't come back till we get our man." The story got headlines in the Passaic dailies, and was broadcasted all over New Jersey and New York, where the metropolitan dailies gave it two-column space. The next day, the local papers reported that the men had returned. The follow-up story was as prominent as the escape story.

Families of Six Children See "Silver Wings" Free

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The management of the Mary Anderson theatre, with the co-operation of a local photographer, arranged a stunt on "Silver Wings" that created a lot of interest in the picture. All families of six children or more were invited to see the picture as the guests of the theatre. Advertisements in the paper called them "Mary Carr Families" and offered to give each family a group photograph free as a memento of "Silver Wings." The families received a pass for the theatre and also an order on the photographer. The photographs were taken Friday, Saturday and Sunday before the engagement started and were then used in the lobby of the theatre.

A miniature stage was constructed with a screen of transparent paper and set up in a music store directly opposite the Louisville Post Office. A trailer made of practically the entire first reel was then run in this small theatre and also slides. The projection machine and the slide machine were in the store and portions of the pictures were thrown through the screen. This was used Friday and Saturday afternoon and evening. The machine was stopped after every four minutes and the slides used to break the continuity and get a new crowd.

This jewelry store next door to the Hippodrome theatre, Reading, Pa., was robbed, which furnished an opportunity for this tie-up, with a card warning the thief that "Sherlock Holmes" was on his trail

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand used this atmospheric prologue to "Tess of the Storm Country," which introduced appropriate musical numbers but did not in any way reveal the plot of the picture

Orphans' Matinee Is Arranged on "Forget-Me-Not"

Baltimore, Md.—When "Forget-Me-Not" played at the New theatre, one of the Whitehurst group in this city, Eugene N. Daly, the manager, arranged a stunt in cooperation with the United Railways which did much to gain goodwill for the theatre and proved an additional drawing card for the picture.

Orphans from institutions all over the city were invited to attend as guests of the management. Four days in the week were given over to the orphans, and at matinees a goodly crowd of youngsters were admitted free. The institutions cooperated cheerfully and busses of the United Railways were loaned to transport the children.

Fire Alarm Brings Town Out to See "The Storm"

Kaufman, Texas.—J. M. Stewart, of the Wonderland theatre, was up against heavy competition recently when playing "The Storm," in the form of a traveling tent show so he made a special exploitation effort.

He obtained a dozen or more railroad torches and put them on the roof of his theatre. One-half hour before show time he touched them off. The fire department had been tipped off. They made a run to the theatre and laid the hose, but the water was not turned on. The glare in the sky and the fire alarm brought every one in town to the theatre. In a few minutes the fire went out, the theatre lights were turned on and the crowds entered the theatre.

Old Time Stagecoach Exploits "Days of Buffalo Bill"

TICONDEROGA, N. Y.—Manager Lew Fischer of the Playhouse theatre obtained an old-time stagecoach to use in exploiting "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," when the serial was booked to open at his house.

The stagecoach, with four horses, was driven about the town, with the driver dressed as Buffalo Bill, two Indians, and Boy Scouts following.

"Old Homestead" Prologue Is Given Realistic Touch

PEORIA, Ill.—Manager R. C. McMullen of Ascher's Palace theatre put an unusual "kick" in his prologue to "The Old Homestead" by toppling a tree onto the roof of a house, thereby partly demolishing the structure.

The stage set represented a farm scene with rural characters singing traditional selections. Presently the lights went out, the wind apparatus produced the semblance of a howl, and the rain machine began to sound like a deluge. The calcium flashed, the cymbals crashed, and the apple tree in center stage fell through the roof of the house.

This racket was repeated at every performance and gave the citizens of the city something to talk about.

Patrons Given Postcards on "The Forgotten Law"

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—The management of Loew's Warfield theatre used souvenir postcards to exploit "The Forgotton Law" very effectively.

Each patron was given an envelope containing four postcards of regulation size, bearing scenes from the picture on one side and an explanatory message on the other.

The envelope was imprinted with a message suggesting that if the patron liked the picture, he or she might like to send the cards to friends, to do which they had only to address the cards and leave them at the box-office, the management furnishing the postage.

Fake Newspaper Extra Excites Dallas About "The Storm"

Dallas, Texas.—Paul L. Wakefield, publicity manager for the Consolidated Film & Supply Company in Texas, put over a piece of exploitation on "The Storm" when that picture played at the Palace theatre which created a furore for a time.

He got out a fake newspaper extra called the Texas Typhoon, with a scare head in red reading: "Storm Sweeps South; To Hit Dallas Sunday; Dallas Populace to Be Swept from Feet When Storm Breaks Over City." The story then went on to tell of the photoplay to be shown at the Palace starting Sunday. The paper consisted of eight pages, largely concerning the picture. A downtown murder "broke" just as the extras were put on the street, and scores of people insisted on paying the newsies for the "Storm" extras, thinking they were on the murder. About 15,000 were distributed.

Novel use of poster cut-outs on heart-shaped cards at the Lyric theatre, Kitchener, Ont., on "Human Hearts"

This unusual effect was gotten by the Plaza theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., in its lobby display on "Do and Dare"

Large Papier Mache Head Made As "Masquerader Float"

Madison, Wis.—Manager A. S. Desormeaus of the Strand theatre, with the cooperation of an art student at the University of Wisconsin, arranged an effective ballyhoo on "The Masquerader."

Through his expertness at papier mache work, the artist made an enormous head and trunk of Guy Bates Post with lights behind the eyes and a tube through the mouth so that the figure could smoke cigarettes. The head was movable.

As the figure was motored down the streets, baby spotlights on both sides and front and back of the seat lit up the figure. The papier mache outlines were puffed out to give the impression of an animate being while the black and white outlines gave a strangely contrasting effect under the darkness of the night in some streets and the glare of electric lights in others.

Algerian Riders on Street for "Under Two Flags"

BUFFALO, N. Y.—T. Cecil Leonard, manager of the New Olympic, got a lot of publicity for the local presentation of "Under Two Flags," when in addition to staging a colorful prologue, entitled "Algerian Nights," in which a local dancer was introduced, he put three persons on the streets, two men and a woman, all donned in bright costumes typical of those worn in the picture.

The woman rode between the men, who each carried a large flag advertising the showing of the picture at the Olympic. The lobby was decorated in Arabian style.

School Tie-Up Aids Showing of "The Headless Horseman"

Los Angeles, Cal.—The management of the Symphony theatre, in co-operation with William T. Dunlap, special publicity and exploitation man for "The Headless Horseman" on the Pacific Coast, arranged a tie-up with Los Angeles schools which greatly benefited the run of this picture.

Mr. Dunlap made a tour of the schools telling the students about "The Headless Horseman." At the same time he encouraged teacher attendance by issuing them an individual pass countersigned by the principal of the school. This pass was good on certain days.

After permission had been given, Mr. Dunlap interviewed 45 principals of junior high schools and gave them for distribution about 1,200 invitations for the teachers of their schools.

The bookstores and newsstands in Los Angeles likewise joined in "The Headless Horseman" campaign and gave window displays throughout the town. Specially lettered cards announcing the sale of the cheap edition on the newsstands and the more expensive editions in the bookstores were used in advertising the feature appearing at the Symphony.

"Go to the Missouri" Month Is Put Over in St. Louis

St. Louis, Mo.—Celebrating the third anniversary of the Missouri theatre, Managing Director Herschel Stuart made it "Go to the Missouri" month, putting over an extensive campaign along this line.

All advertising matter gotten out by the theatre during the month was tied up with the special campaign. Some of the special features were:

Special border on all newspaper ads.

Strips for bottom of all 24-sheet stands.

Special border with the message on all lobby posters. Two felt pennants, 3 by 24 feet, for use in vestibule and along entrance of lobby.

Posters, pennants and house programs in uniform colors of black and orange, using black letters on orange background.

House programs all carrying message across both inside pages.

All special announcement trailers and introduction trailers used on screen to be set inside of a mortise effect forming leaf of a month of November calendar.

Street ballyhoo on "The Sin Flood" used by the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit

Striking use of cut-outs and arena background used in the rear of the lobby of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., on "Blood and Sand," by Manager of Theatres Frank J. Miller. All lobby lights were dyed red and yellow

"Man Who Saw Tomorrow" Tied Up With Convention

Macon, Ga.—Manager E. C. Kingman of the Rialto theatre played "The Man who Saw Tomorrow" coincident with the convention of the Georgia Chapter of the Rainbow Division Veterans. So he invited the veterans to be his guests at the theatre and did it in such a way as to get lots of good publicity for the picture.

First he extended the invitation through the committee in charge and got the theatre and picture mentioned in the souvenir program for the convention. Then he succeeded in having practically every speaker at the convention mention the picture and connect in some way the fitness of the title to the occasion. This was particularly effective when mentioned by the speaker at the unveiling of a monument when 5,000 people were present.

Mr. Kingman gave considerable attention to getting the starting hours over. He published the hours as teasers for five days in advance and then broke it with a display telling what it was all about. He also rigged up a 4 o'clock face in the lobby with the hands pointing always to the start of the next show. This worked so well that Mr. Kingman says he is going to make a special drive on starting hours for all big pictures in future.

Advertising was not permitted in a recent big parade in Nashville, but police co-operation got this float on 'In the Name of the Law" in, regardless

Balloons with Passes Sent Up on "Free Air"

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—The Circle theatre, East 105th street and Euclid avenue, at very little expense put over a stunt that aroused general interest in connection with the feature, "Free Air." The management of the Circle theatre sent up 400 balloons in the neighborhood of the theatre, with a pass attached to each balloon. Folks were on the look-out for the balloons.

Even if they didn't find one of them, they at least knew that there was a picture called "Free Air" at the Circle.

"Remembrance" Week Put Over Throughout Missouri

St. Louis, Mo.—H. H. Niemyer, Goldwynner at the St. Louis branch, has succeeded in putting over a fathers' week, called "Remembrance" week, in Missouri and Western Kentucky, as an exploitation stunt for "Remembrance."

The women's clubs, churches, schools and the civic organizations of St. Louis were first interested in a "remembrance week" for father, the movement later spreading to other Missouri towns and to a number in Western Kentucky. All of the St. Louis newspapers carried stories on "Remembrance Week." These stories were later picked up by out-of-town papers. The account given in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch for Sunday, October 22, explains the nature of the stunt. Under the head, "'Do Something for Dad' is Remembrance Week Motto," the story reads, in part:

Remembrance week is to be observed in St. Louis, starting Saturday, October 28, and continuing through Friday, November 3. Civic organizations, schools, women's clubs, churches and societies are co-operating in the movement and many of the large stores will assist with window displays.

"The week's motto is 'Do Something for Dad.' The idea is to boost the old man, who pays the bills and who has gone through the ages practically unsung—except in comic songs."

Street Corner Signs Are Used on "The Fast Mail"

Franklin, Pa.—The management of the Park theatre saw to it that in advance of the showing of "The Fast Mail" every important street corner in the city was decorated with a large "stop—look—listen" standard six feet in height and bearing the name of the picture and the house.

In the window of the largest toy store in Franklin, special displays of small electric trains were arranged with large placards in the set announcing the photoplay. The trains were run continuously and small painted letterings on each told that they were Engine 999 of the Fast Mail Express.

Stake Placards Are Put Out on "Crossroads of New York"

Troy, N. Y.—Manager Harry Hall of the Strand theatre, in exploiting "The Crossroads of New York," varied the usual crossroads exploitation. Instead of using one large sign in front of the theatre or at a street intersection, he used five hundred small signs around street corners and front lawns.

The signs were stake placards of flexible cardboard. Plasterers' lath was used with the two strips of red cardboard crossed like a railroad sign. The lettering read: "Strand Now—'Crossroads of New York.'"

Unusually elaborate marquee display built by the Empress theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., on "East is West"

Irish Atmosphere Obtained for "My Wild Irish Rose"

Seattle, Wash.—John Hamrick's Blue Mouse theatre in this city was turned into a bit of Ireland last week by Manager Gene O'Keefe for the local showing of "My Wild Irish Rose."

The outside of the theatre was decorated with a typical Irish country scene. Each side of the lobby contained an old fashioned well. All advertising matter around the theatre was worked out in the form of a shamrock.

Manager O'Keefe also had his ushers and cashiers dressed as Irish colleens and lasses, with typical Irish costumes of lace and green color. Decorative work about the theatre was given a green tint by the use of colored lights.

The musical program also carried out the Irish atmosphere.

Newspaper and billboard advertising, as well as printed matter around the store windows and theatre took the shape of three leaf clovers and shamrocks, and was worded in typical Irish brogue.

Display in window of floral shop, botten through tie-up on "The Eternal Flame" by the Orpheum theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Gilded Pebbles Displayed On "Yellow Men and Gold"

ANNISTON, Ala.—An odd lobby display attracted attention to "Yellow Men and Gold" when it played at the Theato, under Roy L. Smart's management.

Manager Smart took a bag of ordinary pebbles, painted them in gold paint, and displayed them on top of a special illuminated one-sheet frame in the center of the lobby. "Gold" was the only caption. The bag was placed in a small inclosure to concentrate attention on it, and was turned over, with most of the stones just outside the mouth of the bag.

Coin bags of all sizes were borrowed from the bank and 15 of them were filled with rocks and hung in the lobby.

"Remembrance" Talk Sent Out Broadcast By Radio

Toledo, Ohio.—Manager Horator of the Pantheon theatre and Eddie Carrier, Goldwynner, took advantage of the latest medium of exploitation, radio, in creating interest in the showing of "Remembrance," through a broadcasted speech by Carrier concerning Rupert Hughes.

That was given at a radio concert sponsored and advertised by the Toledo Daily Blade which conducts the Toledo broadcasting station. This special concert was given on a Wednesday preceding the showing and Mr. Carrier was announced as a member of Goldwyn Pictures corporation and was given eight minutes to tell about Mr. Hughes and "Remembrance." At the conclusion of his speech he had a song plugger sing "When You and I Were Young, Maggie." The theatre had many calls about "Remembrance" the next day.

And old Cadillac automobile, of the vintage of 1906, was used as a street ballyhoo. The title of the picture was painted all over the car. The stunt attracted much attention.

Captive Balloon Carries Signs For "Under Two Flags"

Los Angeles, Cal.—Two of the principal features in the exploitation campaign used by the Kinema theatre on "Under Two Flags" were a colorful street ballyhoo and a captive balloon bearing signs advertising the picture.

For the street stunt, a girl was costumed in a semi-military costume such as "Cigarette," the heroine of "Under Two Flags," wears in the picture. Mounted on a coal black horse, not unlike an Arabian steed, she rode through the principal streets of Los Angeles, bearing a banner or guidon announcing the showing of the film. She was accompanied by a horseman garbed in Arabian or desert costume, similar to that of the desert chieftains in the picture. He also carried a banner.

A large gas-bag balloon was obtained and decorated with huge signs telling of the showing at the Kinema. This balloon was allowed to fly high above the city, where it could be seen and its sign read from a great area.

Mysterious Letters Get Males Interested in "Crossroads"

Sandusky, Ohio—Mysterious postcards from an unknown lady were received recently by male residents of Sandusky. She had abundant black hair and piercing black eyes, as reproduced on the card. The message stated that she would meet them at "The Crossroads of New York" in front of the Schade theatre.

Insofar as the flirtation goes, it has been done before; but George Schade, owner and manager of the theatre bearing his name actually produced the lady. One of the Kewpie dolls dressed up a la the beach at Waikiki was on hand in a glass case before the theatre.

Fashion Show Linked Up With "Fools First" Showing

Waterbury, Conn.—"Fools First" was augmented at Poli's theatre by a fashion show in which $60,000 worth of finery was employed by Manager Peter Murphy. Ten girls took part.

The idea borne out in the show, to establish a tie-up with the picture, was that of dressing beautifully but correctly in contrast with overdressing and throwing money away on clothes. It was a lesson for those who were "Fools First."

"Grandma's Boy" Cookies Used to Exploit Picture

McALESTER, Okla.—Manager Earl Settle, of the Palace theatre, recently put over an effective tie-up on "Grandma's Boy," when he arranged with the Federal Bakery to have cookies made, calling them "Grandma's Boy Cookies." A large window display was arranged with the cookies and attractive announcement cards of the picture at the Palace theatre.

The local management advertised that these "Grandma's Boy Cookies" would be given away on Saturday at the theatre, to all children attending. The cookies were wrapped in tissue paper on which was printed the name of the picture with a cut of Harold Lloyd. These cookies were placed in a large box in the foyer of the theatre. Mr. Settle states that more than 250 cookies were given away to children in one afternoon.

A local candy kitchen gave the Palace theatre a window display and sold a special box of candy called "Grandma's Boy," during the run.

"Polly of the Follies" Ad Is Given Humorous Touch

Albertville, Ala.—The management of the Princess theatre has for some time been using a personal note in its advertising copy, and has injected a humorous touch wherever possible.

When "Polly of the Follies" played there large white space was used with a cut of Constance Talmadge in harem dress and the lines: "Hey There, Who Let You in This Harem?" followed by:

Take it from Connie,
The lure of the footlights
Explains why girls leave home
But when you see her
Doing Siren of the Nile,
Robed a la Salome,
Or Cleopatra,
You'll also understand
Why tired business men
Never go home.

Tie-Up With Legion Sells Many Tickets to "Skin Deep"

Springfield, Mass.—The American Legion got 30 per cent. on all tickets sold by its members to "Skin Deep" when that picture played the Capital theatre, but there were 25,000 tickets sold that way, so Manager Walter Merkle made a profitable tie-up. The run was sponsored by the Legion and conducted for its benefit.

The Mayor of Springfield personally bought 100 tickets and attended the opening. With this example the citizens jumped to the campaign with the results recorded above.

Flame Idea is Carried Out in "Eternal Flame" Front

Augusta, Kans.—John Johnson, owner of the Isis theatre, when he came to exploit "The Eternal Flame," had an idea for a shadow box display in the theatre and red fuses for the marquee. The whole idea was to bear out the thought of "The Eternal Flame" with red lights and flaming torches.

He borrowed the shadow boxes for the torches from a brother exhibitor and used opaque paper over them with the name of the theatre showing and a red front on a white background.

From a railroad man he was able to procure some red track fuses that burned from the marquee.

"The Toll of the Sea"

Technicolor-Metro—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IN reviewing this picture it calls to mind a predecessor in the color scheme, namely, "The Glorious Adventure." And we can safely state that it surpasses the earlier work in the harmony of its colors and the discrimination with which they have been employed. Indeed they blend much better without such a predominance of red. The picture is satisfying to the eye. Pictorially it is exquisitely beautiful with the colors clearly and brightly exposed. It doesn't matter so much what the story contains, for the picture will succeed or fail with its color scheme. We for one cannot see how it can fail.

Naturally "The Toll of the Sea" will be followed by other pictures embellished with colors. This one will be talked about and used as an argument for further experimentation along this line. The story lends itself admirably to the Technicolor process, since it is based upon an old Chinese legend. Some of these scenes are positively enchanting. Really one can travel the globe and fail to find color effects more beautiful than what the Chinese have to offer. The picture is not only a distinct achievement in colors, but its story is of a surpassing quality even though it bears a similarity to the "Mme. Butterfly" theme. The director and the scenarist have cooperated splendidly in giving the production a quality of genuineness. They have worked with sympathetic appreciation.

The story tells of the sea which occasionally gives up wondrous gifts but demands a heavy price. The unconscious body of an American is washed up by the waves and Lotus Flower is happy. He deserts her eventually after he has won her love. The acting is fine, particularly the portrayal of the heroine by a real Chinese girl, Anna May Wong. Her pantomime is rich with tender emotion and feeling. She is just what she pretends to be—a trusting child of lost love—a broken blossom. "The Toll of the Sea" is a persuasive picture which is saturated with romance and beauty. The exhibitor who books it will be giving his patrons a real treat."

"Dawn of Revenge"

Aywon—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A CRUDE melodrama is this "Dawn of Revenge"—one dependent upon far-fetched incident which is anything but wholesome in its appeal. Those spectators who demand something in the shape of sensational plotting regardless of the absence of the human note will likely gather some entertainment from it. But even these same spectators are apt to be disappointed that such a plot has to serve as screen material in this day when authors and directors are searching for the heart touch.

The central figure is a half-crazed cripple, whose mind has become unbalanced through an injury he meets when shoved off a cliff by his successful rival. The girl has transferred her affection and this lonely miner threatens her life. The fortunate suitor comes to the rescue and the disappointed miner suffers his injury. What transpires subsequently is the product of his unbalanced mind. The cripple steals the son of his rival and brings him up as his own. Still vengeful, although years elapse, he plots to marry the boy off to his own sister. But, lo and behold, the girl is discovered to be the adopted daughter of the successful rival and his wife.

There is considerable more plotting which is as unconvincing as it is unwholesome. Let it be said that the disciple of evil is his own executioner in the end. And the others find a belated happiness. The picture has nothing to recommend it on the side of clean entertainment, and the players struggle hopelessly with their roles. Try as they might they cannot make the story and characterization seem real.

"What Fools Men Are"

Pyramid-American Releasing—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

EUGENE WALTER has indicted the flapper as a mercenary creature who takes everything and gives nothing in return until she is brought up sharp with realities in this story of a triangle which carries an additional plot of a conflict between a father and his "flipper" son. Patrons who see it will call it fair-to-middlin' entertainment in that it offers a slice of modern life even though the climax may be anticipated from the opening reel. For one thing it has an even, progressive continuity as prepared by Peter Milne, and the director has done a good job of it despite the fact that he resorts to padding here and there and a slowing up of the tempo to carry it through to feature length.

You know that the flapper will break up her sister's home and that the youth she intrigues into matrimony will eventually make peace with his wealthy father when he is determined to make a man of himself by going to work. The episodes are stressed with pathos which seem exaggerated. The flapper is taken altogether too seriously by the rest of the household. She plays with men's hearts as a cat would play with a mouse. The interludes present her having a gay little fling before she comes to her senses and restores the wife to her husband and develops some character herself.. The plot is really frail because the sequences which reveal the separation and the ultimate reunion could be told in three reels. However, it is balanced with adequate local color and incident.

It strikes us that the director has allowed Faire Binney as the flapper to face the camera too much, with the result that she appears to be posing most of the time, and the maid, played by Lucy Fox, has too much prominence in the plot. The most genuine figure is the boy's father, as portrayed by Barney Sherry. Miss Binney is a good type for the part, even though she has scenes which tax her emotional capabilities.

There is a little lesson attached to the story and it is genuine enough to score most everywhere. The settings, titles and photography are of a first rate quality.

The Cast

|---|---|
| Peggy Kendricks | Faire Binney |
| Bartley Claybourne | Huntley Gordon |
| Kate Claybourne | Florence Billings |
| Ralph Demarest | Joseph Striker |
| Demarest, Senior | Barney Sherry |
| Lawyer | Templar Saxe |
| Ola, the maid | Lucy Fox |

By Eugene Walter. Scenario by Peter Milne. Directed by George Terwilliger. Produced by Pyramid.

The Story—Flapper wins husband's love away from her sister and dabbles in men's hearts on the side. After she has toyed with his affections, she encourages rich man's son to marry her. Eventually the girl comes to her senses and patches up the quarrel between the husband and wife. She also learns to appreciate what true love means.

Classification—Domestic drama carrying a triangle theme.

Production Highlights—The moral attached to theme. The reality of story. The setting. The photography. The good continuity.

Exploitation—This suggests a teaser campaign based upon theme and title. Play up fact that noted playwright wrote it. Use stills of Faire Binney who screens remarkably well.

Drawing Power—Good for any neighborhood house and will please patrons in second class downtown houses. Younger set will enjoy it.

"Minnie"

Marshall Neilan Production-First National—6696 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

HATS OFF to Leatrice Joy. She was good in "Manslaughter," but she has arrived in this picture. As "Minnie," the village ugly duckling. Leatrice contributes to screen literature one of the most human and appealing bits of character portraiture.

Marshall Neilan gave us something different in "Fools First." He has surprised us again with "Minnie." Neilan has succeeded in building into his pictures the much desired element of "surprise." In addition to screening a story of real heart appeal, he has filled it with novel situations. The only fault to find with it is that it is too long in getting started. It could stand editing. Some may object to the scenes in the morgue and the sameness of the automobile rides that "Minnie" takes. There are three of them.

The wireless power machine invented by Minnie's father is shown in all its intricate phases and this injection of the present radio craze offers possibilities for exploitation. The machine shown here seeks to convince folks that the day is not far away when power will be sent forth without wires. The moments surrounding the completion of the invention are filled with laughable situations.

Minnie's efforts to find "her man" are heart touching. In her desire for romance she even sends herself letters and gifts from an imaginative sweetheart. All goes well until her jealous stepsister discovers her scheme and threatens to "tell the world," and Minnie is forced to claim an unidentified body in the morgue as her lover. The body turns out to be that of a Chinaman, but only the newspaper man knows this. It's all very entertaining and with a little speeding up should find a welcome place on any program.

The Story—Minnie, the homeliest girl in town, sick of work and yearning for romance, decides to "invent" a lover. Threatened with exposure of her love plot, Minnie claims an unidentified body at the morgue as her lover. A newspaper man on the trail of the "big" story is about to write the tale when he remembers that his life has also been one of many hardships and disappointments. He tears it up and falls in love with Minnie, who has been made beautiful by a famous plastic surgeon, who has also transformed the husband's facial appearance.

Classification—A delightfully appealing romance of a deserted country wallflower who turns out to be a real beauty. A human love story.

Production Highlights—The appealing characterizations contributed by Leatrice Joy as "Minnie," and Matt Moore as the newspaper man. The moments surrounding Minnie's plot to write herself love letters. The automobile ride episodes—with Minnie usually walking home in the middle of them—when the drivers "get fresh." Her dad's wireless invention—especially when it starts to work.

Exploitation Angles—Since her appearance in "Manslaughter," Leatrice Joy's name means something. Use it in big type here and also play up the other noted members of the cast. The title of this picture is rich in exploitation value. Give a special showing for the "Minnie's" of your town.

Drawing Power—Should find a welcome everywhere.

"Omar, the Tent-Maker"

Associated First National—8090 Feet

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THERE is distinct value to this production from the standpoint of its being a spectacle, but there is additional value in that it brings vividly to life the ancient and romantic Persian poet and philosopher, who fairly breathes again through the characterization delivered by Guy Bates Post, as Omar Khayyam. As Omar, the student, the lover of his teacher's daughter, the heart-broken husband, robbed of his bride, he is delightfully convincing. Yet his charm is more emphatic when following a time lapse, he portrays the suffering, the yearning and the over indulgence of the cup, with a view only to drowning his evident sorrows, after years of loneliness.

There is the expected drama, the work of Richard Walton Tully, and the capable delineations in their respective roles by the cast. But over all, there is the evidence of skilled direction, the handling of a delicate and difficult subject, requiring the directorial genius given the production by James Young.

With a long list of characters to introduce and establish, the first two reels drag. Only the gorgeous settings and atmosphere hold the interest until there is a sudden splurge of action, forcing of Omar's young wife to become wife of the Shah; ancient marriage celebration and native intrigue. And it can truthfully be said that the last three reels make up in action with realistic battles, escapes, punishments and thrilling suspense, all that the first two reels lack.

The Cast

Omar, the Tentmaker.....Guy Bates Post
Shireen.....Virginia Brown Faire
Nizum ul Mulk.....Nigel de Bruliere
The Shah of Shahs.....Noah Beery
Shah's Mother.....Rose Dione
Little Shireen.....Patsy Ruth Miller

By Richard Walton Tully. Directed by James Young.

The Story—Treats of a Persian romance depicting love of Omar and Shireen.TThe Shah hears of her beauty and makes a pilgrimage to carry her back to his land. But she secretly weds Omar. Her pleading is in vain and she is taken from her lover. She spurns the Shah's advances and is imprisoned. Later a child is born which is spirited away and give to his father, Omah, who is ignorant of his relationship. Seventeen years elapse before the unhappy couple are brought together—with happiness restored.

Classification—Romance of Orient, adapted from Tully's play of same name.

Production Highlights—The accuracy of scenes. The atmosphere and backgrounds. The work of Guy Bates Post. The scenes when girl is taken to Shah's court. The episode when Christian slave carries the action. The reunion of the lovers. The scene of Omar's punishment.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise a big spread on this one, with plenty of advance advertising.

"The Dangerous Age"

John M. Stahl Production—First National—7204 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS is the best picture in every way that John M. Stahl has ever offered the industry. It is a distinctly high class piece of work, told in entertaining manner by a cast of unusual excellence. It is a production that approaches the much talked about 100 per cent. class.

"The Dangerous Age" is something that will make most folks think at the same time that they are being entertained. The story deals with an ever-present problem of American home life—the dangerous age when romance leaves the heart of wife or husband and one or the other seek it in other paths with other men or women.

This feature has the advantage of a good story as well as a good cast. Lewis S. Stone has never appeared to greater advantage than in the role of John Emerson, who after twenty years of married life finds his love-making advances rebuffed by his wife and who tries to regain his youth amid the follies of the metropolis. Cleo Madison as John's wife is convincing at all times and rises to fine emotional heights in the climax of the picture. Edith Roberts and Ruth Clifford add beauty to the scene, both wearing some stunning gowns during the action of the story.

From a production viewpoint, "The Dangerous Age" leaves little to be desired. The picture is exquisitely mounted throughout. The scenes in the New York cabaret are the last word in lavish scenic investiture. The race track views are realistic and thrilling. The race between the auto and the train and the wrecking of the auto in front of the flyer is sure to bring the audience to the edge of the seats. The final reel of this film is crowded with suspense and it all ends in a most satisfying manner. It leaves the impression that you have seen something really worth while.

The Cast

John Emerson.....Lewis Stone
Mary Anderson.....Cleo Madison
Ruth.....Edith Roberts
Gloria Sanderson.....Ruth Clifford
Mrs. Sanderson.....Myrtle Stedman
Bob.....James Morrison
Bebe Nash.....Helen Lynch
Ted.....Lincoln Stedman
Robert Chansilor.....Richard Tucker

By Frances Irene Reels. Directed by John M. Stahl. Continuity by J. G. Hawks. Photographed by Jackson J. Rose and Al Siegler.

The Story—After twenty years of married life, John Emerson finds that his wife treats him more like a son than a husband. Romance has left their lives. His attempts to recall their sweetheart days meet with nothing but rebuffs. On the train to New York he meets a charming girl and the acquaintance develops into warm friendship. John finds his departed youth agin. He is on the point of confessing all to his wife, marrying the girl and forgetting the past. The wife sees the error of her ways and John, baring his soul professes his love for her. All's well that ends well.

Classification—A different sort of society drama that stands out as one of the finest productions of the year.

Production Highlights—The acting of Lewis S. Stone, the attractive interiors and exteriors, especially the cabaret scene in New York. The race between the auto and the overland express and the wrecking of the auto in front of the flyer. The race track scenes. John M. Stahl's direction. The tenseness of the suspense in the final reel and the very beautiful wedding scene.

Exploitation Angles—The title. The cast of six stars. Might arrange to have a reporter interview folks on this subject. Might arrange with the police department to stencil the streets with a sign reading "This is THE DANGEROUS AGE." You can boost this attraction.

Drawing Power—Good for any house, anywhere.

"The Altar Stairs"

Universal—4641 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is certainly enough color, excitement and adventure in this story which gives Frank Mayo opportunities to display his virility. The onlooker not only is treated to considerable desert isle stuff—the South Seas again—but is taken to France in the bargain. There is your conflict too—the rescue of a derelict from the savage natives and his ingratitude when he steals from the daring skipper. If you are looking for coincidence you can find that too, for this derelict bobs up in France where he is arrested at the completion of the marriage ceremony from which the story gains its title.

The convenient touch still intrudes for the girl and her father journey to the South Seas where they not only meet the hero but also the derelict. To be rid of the latter the parent urges the hero to take him away where a new trading post is to be established. Meanwhile the rugged trader has fallen in love with the girl who is unable to express her affection because of her unhappy romance. Only a word is needed by the father to explain matters, yet he refers to the derelict as "my friend Tony" whenever he converses with the hero. The picture is strongest in its atmosphere and local color. There is plenty of elemental passion as expressed by the islanders, all of whom are garbed in the regulation pattern, shredded wheat costumes for the women, and white trunks for the men.

The action is rather jumpy because Mayo is continually on the jump from one trading post to another—with many episodes having a background aboard a schooner. He returns to the derelict's island to discover his treachery in inciting the natives to burn the chapel. A fight occurs followed by some picturesque sea incident in which the wastrel is killed by a native. Which of course paves the way for the culmination of the romance between the unhappy girl and the colorful trader.

Mayo can do these elemental stories in such a vigorous manner that he almost makes the figures genuine. You forget that you are looking at visualized fiction, because he plays with sheer enthusiasm and sincerity. It's an "up and at 'em" type of story, calculated to please anyone in search of adventure. It never lags and the interest is always sustained.

The Story—South Sea trader rescues derelict who proves ungratful. Later he falls in love with the wife of the man, though ignorant of her relationship. The girl's father requests that he give the derelict a job, but the latter again proves his treachery. After the wretch is killed the wife is free to declare her love.

Classification—Primitive melodrama carrying adventure and local color. South Sea formula.

Production Highlights—The fine atmosphere and backgrounds. The vigorous work of Frank Mayo. The sea shots, exposing some real stuff as well as some creditable miniature scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise using a newspaper campaign based upon catch lines. Also calls for colorful prologue employing South Sea atmosphere with dancers, etc. Would play up Mayo who is getting better all the time.

"Conquering the Woman"

King W. Vidor Production—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Glenn Watkins)

IT'S a shame to waste such a talented and attractive actress as Florence Vidor on such a stereotyped production as this one, which is built according to a much used formula. The plot has been done many times before. We recall it in a few very recent productions. A daughter of wealth returns from Europe, her mind set on marrying a count and with more pride than is good for the average human. Father meets up with the son of an old friend, who tells him how "to break in" folks like the daughter. Father acts quickly. He has both the daughter and the hero "shanghaied" and landed with many comforts on a deserted South Sea isle. There the young lady becomes hungry. When one is hungry, one is meek. Continued hunger wrecks havoc with pride. After a sojourn of several weeks a vast change comes over the heroine and when it becomes time for papa to "recue" her, all is well.

The picture opens with views of life at a seaside resort near Paris and we see Miss Vidor aquaplaning, swimming and indulging in other red-blooded sports. The action shifts to America, and then quickly to the South Seas. The fights which David Butler puts up during the "shanghaiing" moments are real stuff. The island life is well pictured and there are a number of amusing situations here.

The chase of the two ships through the seas is a bit of excitement. Miss Vidor and Mr. Butler do most of the work in the picture and do it well. The supporting cast is adequate. The photography is clear and artistic, while the subtitles are snappy and excellently worded. This movement of rushing all our heroines to South Sea isles for reformation is about due for a halt, however.

| Florence Vidor | Peter Burke |
| David Butler | Mathilde Brundage |
| Roscoe Karns | Bert Sprotte |

Directed by King W. Vidor. Scenario by Frank Howard Clark. Photographed by George Barnes.

The Story—Judith Stafford is a head strong young lady, who upon her return from Europe with a lot of high falutin' ideas, is "shangaied," together with a red-blooded young man from out of the west, to a lonely island in the South Seas. There begins the metamorphosis of the heroine, who after a three month sojourn comes down "off her high horse," falls in love with her "trainer," and after a royal suitor is done away with, is brought home on papa's ship.

Classification—A romantic drama built according to formula with Florence Vidor as the star and King Vidor as the director the redeeming features.

Production Highlights—Miss Vidor's interpretation of the role of Judith. The convincing European atmosphere in the early scenes. The life on the South Sea isle, where there is much humor interspersed with the drama. The vessel chase in mid-ocean. The lassooing of the fleeing ship by the hero.

Exploitation Angles—Miss Vidor is a popular player and her past performances will help attract business for this one. David Butler is also a favorite.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer"

S-L Metro—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE human quality which characterized Charles Felton Pidgin's story when it made its appearance a decade or two ago—the heart touch and genuineness of its plot and atmosphere which made it a companion piece to "Way Down East" when produced as a play—these virtues have been incorporated into the screen version with such success that the picture will surely find a place in the category of better things. The simplicity of plot, which barely skirts the melodramatic field, but which catalogues the lives of simple folks, living their lives in a simple way, enhanced as it is with a rustic setting and considerable local color—to say nothing of a tender romance that carries just enough conflict to give it balance, makes "Quincy Adams Sawyer" thoroughly enjoyable.

Perhaps it could be shortened here and there, thus quickening up the action in the early reels, yet take away the incident and you lose the atmosphere. Even a country social has its place in lending sentiment. Sawyer comes down from Boston and antagonizes the rural swains because of his easy way with women. What plot there is revolves around his conflict with a real estate shark. The romance is exceptionally appealing and really is the outstanding highlight. Why? Because the young Bostonian is in love with a blind girl. His faith and devotion to her will kindle sentiment in the heart of every spectator.

The climax carries a true, dramatic sweep which is so excellently dovetailed with the preceding incident as to seem entirely in place. The suspense is overwhelming as you wonder whether Sawyer, astride the horse, will reach the raft in time. The blind girl is being carried down the river by a swift current with sure death as a reward when the raft plunges over the falls. It reminds you of Griffith's ice jam in the manner of its treatment. Needless to say, Sawyer wins the race against death. The acting of Blanche Sweet as the heroine is of cameo quality, clearly defined, admirably limned with tenderness and romance.

The Story—Treats of young Bostonian who goes to small New England town to practise law. Is so different from native sons that the village belle endeavors to win him. But the youth has a romance with another girl who is the daughter of the local power. His attention to her aggravates the rivals, and they attempt to embarrass him. But he conquers in the end.

Classification—Adaptation of best seller of a few years ago. Treats of local color, human interest and romance in New England village.

Production Highlights—The large cast, containing names of several favorites. The good photography. The work of Blanche Sweet. The river scene and rescue of heroine. The local color and atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise linking up with book dealers and getting a sale on the novel. Would suggest billing it as human interest story of New England. Calls for elaborate prologue and lobby display. Would advise featuring many members of the cast.

Drawing Power—Should draw well in small communities better than in cities. Cast featured will attract crowds. Good for neighborhoods.

Charles J. Brabin—5400 Feet

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HERE is a picture that for gripping situations has not often been surpassed. If it has a fault it is that its tensity is too continuous; that there is no relief for an overwrought audience perched on the edge of its seat in eager anticipation of the outcome of each sequence.

Highly melodramatic, Mr. Brabin has moulded a simple smooth-running story and has entirely eliminated the usual complications. From start to finish it unfolds naturally and not a foot of the way does the plot become involved.

It is a moonshine story of the southern mountains with a kick the equal of the product they turn out from those stills. Five reels of it leave you in much the same conditions five potions of moonshine would the average individual if he could drink that much.

Uniformly the cast is as good as the picture, with the work of none standing out more prominently than that of any other. Emily Fitzroy is the stoic mountaineer mother who is splendid particularly in the scene where she betrays her husband and sons, moonshiners, that her youngest son may marry the girl of his choice.

Charley Mack, appearing in this picture through the courtesy of D. W. Griffith proves his worth as a screen actor in the role of the young son whose ambition is to foresake the lawlessness of the mountains.

George Bancroft as Lem Tolliver and Burr McIntosh as Paw Tolliver do excellent work, as does Eleanor Fair in the role of the girl.

One of the big moments is the fight scene between Lem Tolliver and the boy. To a certain point it is as exciting as any similar scene that has been seen on the screen. Beyond that point it is mere brutality that disgusts, rather than adds to the scene. The picture would be improved by the elimination of those few objectionable feet.

The Players.....Emily Fitzroy, Charles Mack, Burr McIntosh, George Bancroft, Eleanor Fair, Leslie Stowe, Ernest Chandler, Fred Koser.

By Jay Gelzer. Scenario by Alfred Rabock. Directed by Charles J. Brabin. Photographed by George W. Lane.

The Story—Maw Tolliver is the drudge for her husband and four sons, who are lawless moonshiners. She early discovers the love of her fifth and youngest son for Essie Hardin, daughter of a neighbor. Lem Tolliver kills Essie father when the latter rebukes him for his attack on the daughter. Essie later comes to live with the Tollivers and Lem discovers that Tommy and Essie are in love. He then declares he will marry the girl himself the following week. To thwart him, and secure the necessary funds to send the youngsters on their way to happier surroundings, Maw Tolliver reveals to the Federal authorities the still of the Tollivers and receives the long standing reward for such information. Tommy is suspected of the betrayal and the brothers avow their revenge. The ensuing battle between the authorities and Tollivers results in the survival of but one of the latter. He returns to the cabin to carry out his pledge, as the young couple depart, but is prevented from doing so by the action of Maw Tolliver.

Classification—A melodrama of the southern mountains, interspersed with a pretty romance.

Production Highlights—The battle between the Federal authorities and the moonshiners. The fist fight between Lem Tolliver and Tommy. The splendid photography.

Exploitation Angles — The always-alluring story of the Kentucky moonshiners. The continuous action and the innumerable thrills.

Drawing Power—It should prove a good attraction wherever continuous thrills are appreciated.

"The Super-Sex"

American Releasing—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS story does not put a heavy burden upon the spectator. On the contrary it will be accepted as a likely little piece, which because of its dominant romantic element and pleasing wholesomeness will be catalogued as something light but thoroughly appealing. It is labeled a comedy romance, but we fail to discover any sustained humor which could rouse the risibilities of an audience. There isn't any drama unfolded, either.

What you do see is a little family quarrel reinforced by a tiff between a couple of young romancers. The young man is properly squelched by the girl and his troubles come in bunches when his father complains about his work in the lumber yard. The youth is spirited enough in temperament to quit his job. His grandmother constantly scolds him because he lacks the stick-to-it-iveness of his granddad. Her object is to mould him into a man. There is a firm love behind her arguments.

There is scarcely enough substance in this frail plot to extend through six reels. The surprising thing is how the director fashioned enough incident to carry it along. But Lambert Hillyer has been directing many, many years and he knows how to dress up a story to sustain the interest even though the plot may be lacking in color and variety. The youth unexpectedly becomes wealthy through a lucky investment. So he plans to get even with all his tormentors. And he emerges with the pluck and perseverance of his forefathers. The romance accompanies the incident and is well developed.

Robert Gordon plays the boy with a touch of adolescence—much after the style as Booth Tarkington might have written the character, while Charlotte Pierce is charming as the girl. Tully Marshall as the father hasn't much to do. You appreciate what a good actor he is through his manner in making himself conspicuous. Gertrude Claire is superb as the grandmother—a role which she can interpret a little bit better than anyone else we can suggest. You can't call "The Super-Sex" a knockout. It will serve its little hour and bring a breath of romance at the end of the day. Which is certainly something in its favor.

The Cast

Miles Brewster Higgins.....Robert Gordon
Irene Hayes.....Charlotte Pierce
Mr. Higgins.....Tully Marshall
Mrs. Higgins.....Lydia Knott
Grandma Brewster.....Gertrude Claire
Cousin Roy.....Albert MacQuarrie
Mr. Hayes.....George Bunny
Mrs. Hayes.....Evelyn Burns

By Frank R. Adams. Scenario by Lambert Hillyer. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Distributed by American Releasing.

The Story—Youth discovers that his girl has given him the cold shoulder, and that his father and grandmother are against him. He quits his job. Eventually makes a lucky investment and proceeds to square accounts with everybody. The girl finally gives him her affection and all ends happily.

Classification——Light romantic comedy based upon misunderstanding. Youth has conflict with parents.

Production Highlights—The human appeal. The work of Gertrude Claire, Tully Marshall and Robert Gordon. The wholesome character of plot and characters.

Exploitation Angles—This picture carries a teaser title which can be worked up into teaser campaign. Would advise treating your copy for its human interest and romance, playing it up in a light manner.

Drawing Power—Should draw well in small towns and throughout city neighborhood houses.

"Singed Wings"

Paramount—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ONE will have to accept this as fantastic and forget its artificialities. There is nothing of any real merit in the story. It depicts a Spanish senorita who romances by way of a dream. The introductory reels are filled with allegorical shots showing the girl shot by a wicked jester because she has given a rose to her fairy prince. The old witch who rides a broomstick puts a curse on her and, awakening, she informs her senile grandfather of the tragedy. Therefore he warns her to beware of all lovers.

We cannot see what this introduction has to do with advancing the story. In fact it seems to retard the action. There is never any reality to the plot. It bears a similarity to an old Venetian legend. Tragedy is ever suggested in the figure of a half-crazed clown who is always in character. He worships the girl whose forefathers were Spaniards of prominence in the development of California. This heroine is a dancer in a cabaret who is admired by a rich man who has tired of his wife. It comes right down to a simple triangle. The hero is the nephew of this wife, and it is his object to rescue the girl from such a liaison. The symbol of the rose is expressed at the climax when the disillusioned wife, to win back her husband's love, impersonates the dancer at a masked ball. The rose is missing from her hair.. So the clown shoots her thinking she is the senorita. The concluding scenes show the jester compelling the girl to dance although he thinks she is a phantom. In the end he kills himself.

It's a weird tale, carrying no interest because of its fantastic plot and the strange marionettes which roam through it. The entertainment values are almost nil, despite the hard-working cast that includes Bebe Daniels, Ernest Torrence and Conrad Nagel. A new set of titles would help it considerably—titles which suggest fantasy and romance. The settings are artistic.

The Cast

Bonita della Guerda, a dancer.....Bebe Daniels
Peter Gordon.....Conrad Nagel
Bliss Gordon, his uncle.....Adolphe Menjou
Don Jose della Guerda, Bonita's grandfather
Robert Brower
Emilio, a clown.....Ernest Torrence
Eve Gordon, Bliss' wife.....Mabel Trunelle

By Katherine Newlin Burt. Scenario by Edfrid A. Bingham. Directed by Penrhyn Stanlaws. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Spanish girl has unhappy dream which she believes will come true. The senorita dances in a cafe to support her aged grandfather. A wealthy visitor is charmed by her and is determined to have her at all costs despite the fact that he is married. The girl entertains his advances which causes her lover to become jealous. The wealthy man's wife learns the senorita's dance so that she may win back his love. And a half-crazed clown kills here, thinking that she is the Spanish girl for whom he has a great infatuation. In the end the heroine finds contentment.

Classification—Romantic drama carrying a note of tragedy. Suggests an old-time Venetian tale. Plot involves a triangle with conflict between several suitors.

Production Highlights—The fantastic sequences in the opening scenes. The fine photography and double exposure work in the allegorical scenes. The atmosphere and tone of the production.

Exploitation Angles—Would suggest putting on an elaborate prologue featuring troubadours, ets. Spanish music should be used for the setting.

Drawing Power—Best suited for high class houses catering to high brow audiences. Is not a box office bet.

"The Inner Man"

Syracuse Motion Picture Co.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Glenn Watkins)

GOING into widely different fields for its second contribution to the industry, the Syracuse Motion Picture Company has made an entertaining production based on a stirring story laid in the Blue Ridge. Wyndham Standing and Dorothy Mackail again top the well balanced cast and both put over convincing interpretations. Miss Mackail proves she can act in this picture and is an attractive mountain maid. Mr. Standing is a sterling actor and can always be depended upon for something worth while. The stars are fortunate in having a fine supporting cast.

There is much action in the picture, especially when it gets under way in the mountain locale. The "bad men" of the district, in which the hero owns a mine, set out to frighten away the youth, but instead they set off the spark of manhood and there are some stirring fistic and gun battles.

There is an amusing scene introduced when the hero on his first night in the mountains, has a weird dream and we are shown glimpses of maidens dancing on the greensward and then follows our hero clad a la pajamas rollicking forth with the slow motion camera brought into play to bring out the laughs.

The hero makes such a success of running things for father that the lad is made general manager of the mine and after Sally, the Blue Ridge belle is clad in one of milady's modern gowns, love springs forth and in the end all is happiness. During the action of the piece the audience is treated to some fine natural scenery. The photography is flawless. "The Inner Man" is a good program picture.

The Cast

Thurlow Michael Barclay.....Wyndham Standing
Thurlow Michael Barclay, Sr.....J. Barney Sherry
Old Man Wolf.....Louis Fierce
Bob.....Leslie Hunt
Sally.....Dorothy Mackail
Jud Benson.....Gustave Von Seyfertitz
Randall.....Arthur Dewey
Ned Sawyer.....Martin Kinney

Adapted from novel by Charles Mackay. Directed by Hamilton Smith. Phhotographed by Arthur A. Cadwell. A Playgoers' Picture distributed by Associated Exhibitors.

The Story—Thurlow Barclay is a young man more given to deep and scientific study and feminine sports than he is to business and his father is much put out because of this fact. He, however, succeeds in getting him to take a vacation and go to inspect Dad's mine, in the Blue Ridge. On his arrival there he meets up with real life, has a list of stirring adventures and is made into a real man, ending up by marrying a fair mountain maid.

Classification—A comedy-drama possessing several melodramatic moments and some stirring mountain gun battles.

Production Highlights—The attractive natural settings "in the Blue Ridge." Wyndham Standing's interpretation of the role of the man who is made over by contact with real life. The kidnapping of Sally by Jud and the ensuing gun play attending her rescue. The fight between Jud and Thurlow. Dorothy Mackail's convincing portrayal of the mountain maid.

Exploitation Angles—This one has a cast of well-known players. Use the names big in your ads. Might put a man on the street dressed in conspicuous golf suit, large horn rim glasses, college hat, etc., and appropriate sign on back of coat, about "the outer man has nothing to do with the 'Inner Man' at the Strand theatre all week."

Drawing Power—Should draw well in neighborhood houses and second class downtown houses.

Scene from the Universal comedy "A Rip Snoring Night," starring Lewis Sargent.

"The Dangerous Adventure"

Warner Brothers—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

IF your patrons like thrills and don't care how unreal or impossible they are, this picture will be the one for you. This feature has more thrills per foot than most productions have per reel. It is a great film for the children. They will revel in it.

The foreword explains that the producers make no assertions about the picture, the sole object being to grip the imagination. One needs a vivid imagination, indeed, to picture such events as recorded as being in or near the realm of possibility. However there is a demand for this kind of picture, and the Warner Brothers are to be congratulated for attempting the feature on the scale with which it is produced.

The African jungle atmosphere has been realistically copied in the many large and fantastic sets. There is fine camera work in evidence throughout and the direction is good. The feature abounds in dramatic moments. There is a terrific tropical storm, with much lightning, wind and downpour. And an earthquake and a volcano eruption. There is a cannibal village with all its weird equipment. In the end the treasure is found and there comes peace and happiness.

The Cast

Marjorie Stanton.....Grace Darmond
Edith Stanton.....Derelys Perdue
MacDonald Hayden.....Philo McCullough
Jimmy Morrison.....Robert Agnew
Herbert Brandon.....Jack Richardson

By Frances Guihan. Directed by S. L. Warner and Jack Warner. Photographed by John W. Boyle, Andre Barlatier, Floyd Jackson and W. R. Griffin.

The Story—Deals with the "thrilling" adventures of the daughters of Professor Stanton, scientist and explorer, in their search for hidden treasure in the Central African jungles: Before that treasure is reached the girls and their lovers, who have followed them, go through some of the narrowest escapes recently recorded on the screen. But none of the wild beasts work fast enough and our heroines usually wiggle out in some way.

Classification—A story of romance and adventure laid in the African jungles with most of the familiar "wild" animals being introduced during the action.

Production Highlights—The success with which the African jungles have been transported to Los Angeles. The realistic tropical thunderstorm. The underwater fights with alligators. The hero in the lion's pit. The introduction of the many beasts of the jungle. The eruption of the volcano and the earthquake.

Exploitation Angles—Convert your lobby into a jungle scene. Cut out the animals from the paper on the films and mount them in your lobby set on beaver board. Your taxidermist may have a stuffed beast which you could borrow. Mount it on a motor truck and with striking signs on the the truck start it about town. Perhaps you can convince some colored person to don jungle regalia and act as a ballyhoo for the show.

Drawing Power—Novelty of story will appeal everywhere.

"While Justice Waits"

Fox—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE is a favorite formula based upon the runaway wife who has eloped with another man and which is developed in a conventional manner to an obvious conclusion which results in a happy reunion. The plot has been enlivened occasionally with a few twists which makes it average entertainment. The fault with the story is its familiarity. The introduction gives it away. The hero strikes it rich in the gold mines and is eager to get back to his wife and surprise her with his good fortune. You know for a certainty that she will be absent. Then comes a lapse of four years, during which the distracted husband and father searches for his better half and the little boy. He discovers a young lad, and once more the surprise element is missing because the youngster turns out to be his offspring.

The following sequences carry more interest in that the spectator is thrown off his guard by the manner in which the hero will execute his revenge. Here is where the suspense picks up. The hero gets in touch with the trespasser and the latter, believing that it is all over with him, attempts to shoot the father, although the little boy gets the bullet. So there is only one way out—the suicide route. The wife explains that the villain tricked her into going away with him. And the husband promptly forgives her. This formula has served long and faithfully upon the screen. You know how every situation will develop. The hero is unduly virtuous—so much so that you can almost forgive the wife for leaving him. There is some elemental stuff depicted and Dustin Farnum makes the most of it.

The story is strongly suggestive of "Moonshine Valley," in which Brother Bill appeared a short while ago. At that it will please the steady picturegoer who is not in search of highbrow entertainment every time he enters a theatre. The cast includes Earl Metcalf as the heavy and Irene Rich as the heroine. Both do capable work. Some day Dustin Farnum will have an original story. He certainly deserves something more novel than what has been given him here.

The Cast

Dan Hunt.....Dustin Farnum
Nell Hunt.....Irene Rich
George Carter.....Earl Metcalf
Hunt, Jr.....Junior Delameter
Joe.....Frankie Lee
A man.....Hector Sarno
The man's daughter.....Peaches Jackson
Mollie Adams.....Gretchen Hartman

By Charles A. and Don Short. Scenario by Jack Strumwasser. Directed by Bernard Durning. Photographed by Don Short. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Treats of a husband whose wife has abandoned him. He returns from Alaska to find that she has taken their son with her. The man joins the interloper's outlaw band and after four years is reunited to his wife and child.

Classification—Melodrama based upon abandoned husband formula. Conventional plot.

Production Highlights—Fairly good suspense considering familiarity of plot. Farnum's satisfying work and pleasing performance by Irene Rich.

Exploitation Angles—Would suggest going after Farnum fans, telling them that star has a dramatic story here. Use the regular campaign, consisting of posters, lobby display, etc.

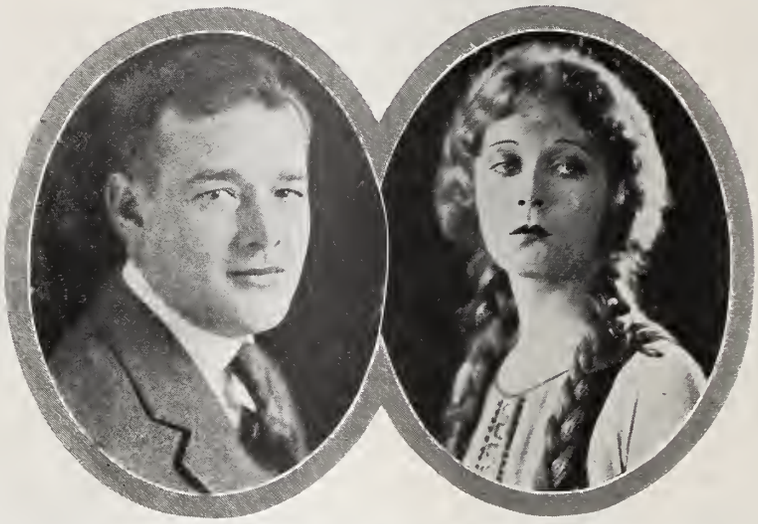
Drawing Power—Suitable for second class downtown houses. Will be liked wherever star is popular.

"Thelma" Meets Demand for Society Picture

THE accomplishment of Chester Bennett in producing "Thelma" has been acclaimed, in the few weeks it has been before the trade and the public, as one of the best examples of a combination of dramatic values with pictorial beauty. The consensus of opinion is unanimous—"Thelma" definitely establishes Jane Novak as a high grade star, and places its director, Mr. Bennett, among the ranks of the screen's greatest directors.

Mr. Bennett, six months ago, first announced that he had acquired the screen rights to "Thelma," Marie Corelli's most famous novel and the book which first brought her world-wide prominence. The book had a circulation on its first printing which exceeded at that time anything ever given a novel. Its daring and vivid characterizations immediately caused a maelstrom of discussion, and later, when dramatized "Thelma" was one of the stand-bys of stock companies throughout the country. It is probable that every town that has ever housed a stock or repertoire company has seen "Thelma" enacted on the stage at least once every two years.

The locale of the story is in a Norwegian village and in London This diversity of setting permits Miss Novak to appear first as a Norwegian peasant maid, and later as the favorite of London society. For the first sequence an entire village, extending for several blocks, was especially built. It was constructed near the Pacific ocean, several miles north of Santa Monica where the scene strongly resembles that of Norway. Boats of special Norwegian design were also built for the ocean scenes of the production. The many readers of the book will find that Miss Novak is the "Thelma" of Marie Corelli's novel in every way. Her long blond hair, which braided, reaches below her waist, and her fair complexion, makes her an ideal type for the part. It was, in fact, her personal fitness for the role that induced Mr. Bennett to select this story for picturization. When Antony Anderson, a well known painter and art critic, first met Miss Novak a year ago, he stated that her exquisite coloring and tall regal beauty represented the exact type necessary to properly envision a daughter of the old Norwegian Viking kings. This hint to Mr. Bennett resulted in a painstaking search for a suitable screen story representing a Norwegian heroine, which ended with the purchase of "Thelma."



Left—Chester Bennett, director of the new F. B. O. special production "Thelma," adapted from the famous novel and play by Marie Corelli. Right—Jane Novak, who plays the title role in the production.

The second sequence, which is laid in London, was taken advantage of by Mr. Bennett, who incorporated in it one of the most elaborate fashion displays ever seen on the screen. This was a distinct innovation in a Jane Novak picture inasmuch as she has heretofore appeared most often in Northwest and outdoor pictures of all descriptions. Miss Novak found the magnificent sets depicting a Parisian modiste establishment and a London drawing room in distinct contrast to her usual log cabin. The most gorgeous and beautiful creations that could be found with a valuation of more than $25,000 were secured to make Miss Novak's first appearance before the camera in beautiful gown really an auspicious event. Arrangements were made with Vogue, foremost Pacific Coast stylist, for the loan of their most costly, up-to-date and exclusive patterns of women's wear from Paris to be worn by the members of Miss Novak's company during the society scenes; while Miss Novak wore her own latest creations and importations.

Willard George, furrier to the few of unlimited means, furnished the furs, including a Hudson seal cape, a squirrel cape and a Beige fox, the total of which alone represented more than $15,000. Several plain-clothes detectives were engaged to keep guard over the gowns and furs day and night while the scenes were being filmed.

In speaking of the fitness of Miss Novak for the role the Moving Picture World reviewer stated: "It is doubtful if a better choice than Jane Novak could have been made for the flower-like role of Thelma; in fact she seems the embodiment of the author's idea. Bert Sprotte gives a striking performance as Olaf, her proud old father, a vigorous man who is proud of his descent from a line of Norse kings and still worships their god, Odin." In conclusion the reviewer states: "The fact that this production is based on a standard book which for a number of years has been very widely read all over the world, is an exploitation point which the exhibitor should not overlook as there are a large number of persons in every town who will want to see the story in its film form."

Lillian Gale in the Motion Picture News wrote: "From a production standpoint 'Thelma' will win new friends, since necessary background and appropriate sets have been provided in addition to the well balanced cast selected. Jane Novak delivers a splendid characterization of the old fashioned Norwegian girl and assumes the role of Lady Errington with admirable poise. The direction and photography are above the average and in view of the mass of detail identified with the original story it may be said that 'Thelma' is a splendid screen version of Marie Corelli's popular novel."

The Film Daily reviewer said, under the heading of "You can please a good majority" that Director Bennett secured many ideal shots for his exteriors and that the interiors are very well done. Excellent photography is another good feature of the picture, stated the reviewer.

Many reports of big bookings on "Thelma" are now reaching the F. B O. home office and branch managers everywhere state that the two previous Chester Bennett productions "The Snow Shoe Trail" and "Colleen of the Pines" have greatly increased the star's following.

Splendid Cast Supports Star in "Thelma"

A cast that is far stronger than those gnerally known as "all-star" casts supports Jane Novak in "Thelma," her third production for Film Booking Offices of America, produced under the direction of Chester Bennett production. Every role in the play is filled by a player of established standing and popular appeal.

In the leading male role, opposite the star, Vernon Steel appears to excellent advantage. Barbara Tennant, one of the most beautiful leading women of the screen, appears as "Britta," an important role. The other outstanding members of the cast, all of whom are well known in the picture world, are Wedgewood Nowell, Harry Lounsdale, June Elvidge, Harvey Clark, Bert Sprotte, Gordon Mullen, Jack Rollens and Peter Burke. Little Virginia Novak completes the cast.

Three striking scenes from the Chester Bennett production of the famous classic novel and play "Thelma," in which Jane Novak in the title role is supported by a strong cast. "Thelma" is a special on the F. B. O. program.

W. R. SHEEHAN, general manager; Herbert E. Hancock, head of the industrial and educational departments, and his assistant, Frank E. Tierney, were in town for the opening of the new Fox exchange at 496 Pearl street, Thursday evening, November 23. There was a buffet luncheon, music by the Yankee Six and entertainment by acts from various theatres. Telegrams were read by Mr. Tierney from Governor-elect Albert E. Smith, Will H. Hays, Senator James J. Walker and many exhibitors and exchange men. It was also announced at the party that Clayton P. Sheehan, district manager, had been commissioned to take a three-month trip to South America as a special representative for the Fox company. Charles N. Johnston is manager of the new Fox exchange, which is one of the most completely equipped in the country.

Another popular Buffalonian is going abroad. It is M. A. Chase, district manager for Universal, who sails early this month for Europe, where he has been appointed general manager for the Universal Film Company, with headquarters in Berlin. A farewell banquet was given Mr. Chase by members of the local office Saturday evening, November 25, in the Hotel Iroquois. ## Around Cleveland Exchanges

FRED DESBERG, managing manager of Loew's Ohio theatres, pulled something altogether new last Friday when he staged a "professional" midnight performance of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland. Mrs. Fred Stone, wife of the star of "Tip Top," playing at the Ohio Theatre, and Mrs. Leslie Carter, appearing with John Drew in "The Circle" at the Hanna Theatre, were hostesses. Raymond Hitchcock was there, as also John Drew. Reading the roll call of those present sounds like a list of Who's Who in Stageland. It is so seldom that theatrical folks get a chance to see what's being done on the other stage that they were enthusiastic over the opportunity thus afforded them. They were delighted with the production, which opens for an extended run at the Stillman theatre of Sunday of this week.

C. E. Almy, local Metro exchange manager, isn't making any secret of the fact that "Quincy Adams Sawyer" opens in Ohio on December 10th simultaneously at the Temple, Toledo; Strand, Akron; Capitol, Youngstown; and Valentine, Canton.

C. L. Peavey, manager of Hodkinson's local office, arranged a special screening of Will Rogers' latest triumph, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," for the benefit of the members of the Cleveland Cinema Club last Friday morning. After viewing the picture, Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, president of the Cinema Club, asked for an expression of opinion, and everyone present recommended the production not only as an entertainment but also as a spur to jaded literary tastes. As "Ichabod Crane," Rogers made a distinct hit with the ladies.

Norman C. Vibbard has been appointed special sales representative for the Progress Pictures Company. Vibbard was formerly connected with the local Associated Exhibitors exchange.

The Progress Pictures Company, recently formed with J. S. Jossey as president and F. C. Fielder as vice president and general manager, is living up to its name. Fielder just got back from a tour of the territory and says that the exhibitors met him with a hearty welcome and a sharpened pencil all along the line. The Arrow product, which the Progress Pictures Company is putting out, consists of 40 features, 24 Eddie Lyons comedies and a serial. Fielder is thoroughly convinced that this is the day of the Independents, and that Independence and Progress travel the pace that can't be beat.

Soviet Offenders Are Seen in Pathe News 94

IMPRESSIVE closeup scenes at the end of the Moscow trial of more than a hundred offenders against the Russian Soviet Government are shown in current issue No. 94 of Pathe News. The faces of the mob of unkempt prisoners are clearly depicted as the sentence of the court is read condemning fourteen of them to death. That this sentence has since been remitted does not affect the human interest value of the pictures.

"Exhibit A" at the trial is the big automatic pistol with which the life of Lenin was attempted. One of the accused young girl conspirators is pictured making a vehement speech to the court. The trial attracted people from all over Russia.

Two other items in this issue are scenes at the Princeton-Yale football game, and official public welcome to Georges Clemenceau, "Tiger of France," who is also shown paying the tribute of flowers at the grave of Colonel Roosevelt.

First of O'Conor Two-Reel Series Ready

Grover Jones directed and wrote the picture. Eddie Boland has been secured to co-feature with Bob O'Conor in the two-reel series.

Radio Basis for Two Reeler

Romantic Story Produced in Co-operation With Scientific American

Educational's latest special short subject, now in preparation for early release, is "Via Radio," which tells in interesting fashion the romantic story of the conquest of electric waves by which continents are linked; the sea robbed of its terrors and culture carried to the farthermost corners of the world.

"Via Radio" was produced under the supervision of Scientific American.

Starting with a graphic illustration of sound waves and showing, by means of a recently perfected mechanism, the oscillograph, an actual photograph of the sound waves of the human voice, the picture clearly explains how these sound vibrations are harnessed to the radio waves and projected into space, to be picked up by the aerials of the million owners of radio sets in the United States.

The transmission of commercial messages from the powerful trans-Atlantic stations is explained; also, the experiments in shore to ship telephony, in connection with the present land systems.

By far the most popular use of radio, however, is the broadcasting of musical programs and entertainments which fill the air every evening. Interesting views of the interiors of these broadcasting stations are shown.

Radio, however, is not free from fault. The origin of static is shown, and its sound when caught by the receiving instrument is depicted.

Altogether, the subject is treated in an interesting and instructive manner. It is not a dry, scientific treatise on the mechanical or electrical side of the science, but an entertaining and amusing picture on a timely subject.

One Reelers in Vitagraph List

Urban Popular Classics Offer as Interesting Program Material

AMONG the Urban Popular Classics, being released by Vitagraph, are a number of single reels with wide appeal, such as "Some Wild Babies," "The Alphabetical Zoo," "Alexander Hamilton," "Better Milk," "Bending the Twig," and "Spending Six Hundred Million a Day."

"Some Wild Babies" is undoubtedly one of the most instructive and interesting of them all. Recorded by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator at the Bronx Zoo, Arthur H. Fisher and F. Percy Smith, it depicts the parental instincts of birds and animals throughout the world. Life's story is told and retold in the animal and bird kingdom, in this classic.

"The Alphabetical Zoo" is akin to the book that teaches youngsters A. B. C. since it begins with A for Alapaca, B for Bison, C for Camel and so on through the alphabet, depicting interesting moves in the lives and habits of wild animals in captivity.

The reel devoted to the life of "Alexander Hamilton" is especially adaptable for use in schools, although it is an interesting and well done screen narrative of the great statesman's life.

"Better Milk" offers direct appeal to families where there are children, and it is a good thing, too, for grown ups to get an idea of the amount of work involved in keeping up the milk supply.

"Bending the Twig" is founded upon the Proverb: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." It illustrates ways and means for training children.

"Spending Six Hundred Million A Day" illustrates the method and cost of supplying New York City with water. It is interesting to note that from the Catskill Mountains 125 miles distant, comes a daily ration of 395,000,000 gallons of water. An appropriate slogan would describe the interest embraced in this subject "You never miss the water until the well runs dry."

Miss Marcel is well known in America on account of her splendid acting in the New York and the Chicago productions of "Scandal," which ran one year and a half respectively. She also played in English motion pictures before coming to America, and being petite in build has frequently assumed child parts. Miss Marcel has been given a long term contract, to take her place with the other Century girls, Ena Gregory, Betty May and Lois Boyd.

Third "All-Star" Burr Comedy Given Title

"A Social Error" is the title of the third "All Star" Comedy produced by C. C. Burr, which is acclaimed as greater in cast, story and the pretentiousness of sets, than its two predecessors. It features Mary Anderson, Charles Murray and Raymond McKee, and has just been completed under the direction of Gregory LaCava.

For this two-reeler C. C. Burr engaged Flora Finch to enact the role of Murray's wife, with the result that the picture is said to be one of extreme merit. The cast also includes Georgia Russell and Mathew Betts, who, in conjunction with the aforementioned players, give a highly entertaining account of themselves throughout the entire two reels.

Slow Motion Football in Selznick News Reel

Selznick News No. 1096 presents slow motion pictures of the Army-Navy game. In issue No. 1094 a Selznick cameraman also obtained slow motion pictures of the Princeton-Yale game. The Selznick News has placed special emphasis on football pictures because it has felt that the slow motion analysis of the spectacular plays in the big games is of unusual interest to sport lovers all over the country. The camera has caught all the interesting details of the most important plays in the big football contests of the season.

Dec. Mermaid Release Titled "A Good Scout"

THE next Mermaid Comedy, listed for release late in December by Educational, features Jimmie Adams, in a story about life in a Boy Scout camp. The picture is called "A Good Scout." It is said that from the moment the picture opens with the family parrot getting an eye full of grape fruit juice until it closes, with Jimmie and his sweetheart making love amid a swarm of bees, Adams has put enough action into the two-reel subject to satisfy the most vigorous of Scouts.

Virginia Warwick, beauty contest winner and one of the youngest of all screen comedy leading ladies, has the principal feminine role with Adams, who is also supported by a cast including Kalla Pasha, the "Terrible Turk," Cliff Bowes and other well known comedians.

A large number of animals have been used to add to the fun. They include dogs, a bear, an alligator, a goat, a pig, a burro and a calf, besides the parrot.

Cleveland Critic Acclaims "Let 'Er Run"

Referring to the Educational-Christie Comedy, when commenting upon the program at the Allen Theatre, the Cleveland Plain-Dealer reviewer wrote:

"'Let 'Er Run' is the name of the plotted story from Christie's celluloid atelier. Whether one ought to discuss first the Allen's comedy or the crepe paper drop, is a matter of concern; the comedy's entertainment quality is about 33 1-3 per cent higher than the average in its class, and the curtain is something new." About the climax he continued with "Yet, here is a knock 'em cold race and its only effect is to make the audience fairly raise from its seat."

Baby Peggy's Next Picture Well Under Way

The cast of "Grandma's Girl," Baby Peggy's next picture, is well on its way. Besides Jimmy Kelly as the grandfather, Florence Lee has been engaged for "Grandma." Others in the cast are Hazel Deane, Baby Jose, and Captain Cullinan.

Alf. Goulding, author of "Grandma's Girl" continues to direct the tiny star, who has reappeared "on the lot" again.

Baby Peggy's last picture "The Senorita" has had its title changed to "Sunny Smiles"

Home Life Subjects Presented

Series of Human Interest Stories Sponsored by Woman's Home Companion

AS a part of its program in the interest of better films, the Woman's Home Companion is presenting a series of two-reel dramas and comedies of American home life.

Each month the editor selects an idea set forth in the pages of the magazine, which may be a feature article, an essay or an editorial. From this theme a motion picture scenario is written.

The first of the series is "The Wife Business," a comedy drama based on a special article written by Alice Ames Winter, which will appear in the Woman's Home Companion for January under the title of "What Is Your Market Value, Madam?"

The second picture is titled "The Disposing of Mother" and deals with the influence of modern thought on the middle-aged woman. The title role, in this instance, has been enacted by Mary Alden, heralded as famous for her delineation of mother roles.

The director of these pictures is Arthur J. Zellner and the scenarios are the works of Evelyn Kenyon.

In speaking of the magazine's venture into the production of motion pictures, Gertrude B. Lane, editor of the Woman's Home Companion, said:

"This is a direct and practical method of testing the interest of the public in better films. If it is supported by lovers of motion pictures, it will encourage commercial producers to make five-reel features of the same wholesome, real-life type."

Will H. Hays, in a letter to the editor said in part:

"Clean pictures are not only good morals but good business. I hope that your voice may ring clear in the encouragement of those producers, distributors and exhibitors who are joined in the effort to give America pictures of the highest type."

Pathe's Dec. Program Announced

Pollard and Maloney in Two Reelers; Also Eight Single Reel Offerings

PATHE'S Dec. 10 release program of ten subjects presents Snub Pollard in the comedy "Newly Rich" and Leo Maloney in "One Jump Ahead," of the Range Rider Series. The list includes Pathe News Nos. 100 and 101 and Topics of the Day No. 50.

In "Newly Rich," Snub Pollard as the chauffeur of a suddenly prosperous family beats the butler to the hand of the pretty heiress (Marie Mosquini).

"One Jump Ahead" neatly expresses the close and intense physical action of Leo Maloney and all of the members of his supporting cast in this stirring Western. In the guise of a range "drifter," Maloney is a Ranger on the trail of a gang of fake cattle buyers

The one-reel Hal Roach comedy featuring Paul Parrett, with Jobyna Ralston, called "I'll Take Vanilla," shows the hero mixed up with a plumber and a few burglars in a drug store riot with Jobyna Ralston as his ingenious sweetheart.

The Pathe serial, "Speed," with Charles Hutchison, reaches its eighth episode.

"Young Mr. Jazz" is the one-reel Harold Lloyd re-issue, in which the comedian develops that breezy character aided and abetted by Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard.

The Aesop's Film Fable of this release program is called "The Man Who Laughs."

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"In Dutch"
(Educational—Two Reels)

HERE, the comedian Bobby Vernon, certainly does get "in dutch," by attemptnig to claim the hand of a girl who is also admired by a man "higher up." In fact, the rival is the leadcr of a fratcrnity to which the girl's father also belongs, but Bobby does not. What the brothers of the order do to Bobby in initiating him, places him in many embarrassing positions with the girl, and until the last it would appear that he might ncver offer her his fraternity pin as an emblem of their engagement.

The situations in this comedy are amusing. It has been well directed and has the semblance of plot; well photographed and employs a number of pretty girls. It would naturally appeal to younger people more than to older heads. Yet, withal, it offers a few new twists and will possibly find much favor with comedy enthusiasts. We might add that it is one of the best in which Bobby Vernon has appeared. —LILLIAN GALE.

"Newly Rich"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

IF there is any value to this two-reel so-called "comedy," it is in the fact that it features Snub Pollard, and is perhaps a fair example of a familiar type of low comedy.

Snub Pollard is cast as the chauffeur of a family, suddenly numbered among the so-called "rich." The attractive daughter enjoys her eighteenth birthday, when a picnic is given, and fortune telling gypsies are introduced. The girl is told by one of these that she will marry a servant, and it comes true, in that she gives her heart and hand to the chauffeur, who is responsible for saving her life. Training him to assume "society manners," proves a task, especially when his relatives break in upon a dinner party. Here the direction has taken undue license even under such circumstances as the situation provides.

It is possible there is a welcome somewhere for this sort of thing, which, in our opinion, touches upon vulgarity. However, we cannot conceive of anyone really finding it amusing.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Love Drops"
(Universal—One Reel)

HERE is a comedy with a touch of O. Henry about it. Neely Edwards has his palm read; he buys a bottle of "Love Drops" from the palm reader, and as a consequence is loved by every woman who looks at him—including a negress, a girl who deserts her "intended" during the ceremony to follow Edwards, a bevy of bathing beauties, a large female of the washerwoman persuasion, an individual who looks as if she were the incarnation of what most people think Mrs. Pankhurst and Carrie Nation looked like, rolled into one, and several others. Meantime he has been told that his uncle's fortune will be his if he stays away from women for a year. He takes refuge from his pursuers on a rock in the ocean, but is wooed by a mermaid. And then you find that he is selling the "Love Drops" and that the early part of the film has been merely his sales argument.—STUART GIBSON.

Herbert Rawlinson is the star of "The Scarlet Car," rom which the scene above is taken, a story by Richard Harding Davis, directed by Stuart Paton, a Universal production

"Step Forward"
(First National—Two Reels)

EVERY motion picture comedian must take his turn at being a motorman, or conductor, or whatever it is that the operator of a one-man street car is called. In "Step Forward" Ben Turpin takes his turn. The comedy is very much like all the others in which a car figures—and there have been a number of them lately—but the patron of cross-eyed men gets out of his effort a good many unusual bits of horseplay and a new twist or two which help to put the film in a class by itself. The sequence in which Ben's two fair passengers and the annoying masher slide from end to end of the car as he alternately stops and starts is in itself worth running the film to see.—STUART GIBSON.

"The Fresh Kid"
(Universal—Two Reels)

JOHNNY FOX is the sort of boy who has freckles, who steals your door mat on Hallowe'en, who buys eggs in mistake for butter when he's sent to the store, and then breaks the eggs, who—but you know him. In "The Fresh Kid" he does things which make you long to give him a clout over the head. You sympathize heartily with the "city feller" when Johnny interferes with his love-making to Johnny's sister. Even the subsequent developments, when the "city feller" steals Johnny's father's money and elopes with Johnny's sister, and is captured through the medium of Johnny, cannot quite cure you of your desire to give Johnny a spanking. Yet—he's a right nice little duffer, after all.—STUART GIBSON.

"I'll Take Vanilla"
(Pathe—One Reel)

THIS is truly an amusing short subject. It is difficult to concede that so much can be crowded into a thousand feet of film. Nevertheless, that explains its speed. The center of action is the interior of a smart "tea shop," where Paul Parrott is a sort of soda-clerk-manager. His position becomes embarrassing due to the fact that the pretty girl, whom he would impress, happens to be a witness to his wild attempts to maintain proper dignity. This comedy is unusually clean, fast and delivers smiles at an express rate.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Counter Jumper"
(Vitagraph—Two Reels)

IN the category there may be better comedies than "The Counter Jumper." If so, they are in the offing. Gauging possibilities of a comedy upon its laugh provoking merits, this one hits the bull's eye for speed, development of situation and fun. While at times it may border upon "slap-stick," a more accurate description is "exaggerated farce." And with it all, there is somewhat of a production.

Most of the happenings occur in connection with the star-comedian's activities in the role of a misunderstood clerk of a general store, described as the marketing headquarters of a Northwest Trading Post. The property is the inheritance of an attractive heiress, which has little to do with the sequences involving most of the fun, incidents that start innocently enough, ending in veritable riots. These are so distinctly varied, it is difficult to realize that so much action and fun can possibly be crowded into two reels. One novelty embracing a walking egg, one that is so strong it sprouts legs and leads the comedian all over the place trying to catch it, is more than funny. It is decidedly clever.

Those who enjoy comedy will undoubtedly approve of "The Counter Jumper," a clean, fast and thoroughly entertaining farce.—LILLIAN GALE.

Graphic No. 2549
(Educational—One Reel)

IN this novelty offering there are views showing "Dixie's Baby Orchestra" of New Orleans, composed of self taught children between seven and thirteen; "Queer Fish," such as the camera has caught in their comfortable quarters in New York's acquarium. Those who have never had the privilege of looking at these may enjoy close up views of some rare species.

There is considerable footage devoted to showing how a noted hair dresser contrives to make the coiffure fit the face of his customer, with a direct appeal to feminine members of an audience, but there is something for the men, too, since the reel concludes with "The Monarchs of Dogland," a delight to lovers of dogs.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Three Hundred and Sixty-five Days"
(Pathe—One Reel)

SNUB POLLARD takes an old theme and presents it with a new idea—and the result is funny indeed. Snub and his family are relatives of a rich old man, who has a myriad of other relatives. The old man presents the entire group with one lot and says that all must live upon it for one year. The family which at the end of the year has refrained from fighting will inherit his money. Since the lot is occupied by everybody else, Snub slights his dwelling from a balloon. As a consequence, he avoids fights, and at the same time has a series of hilarious adventures. Of course he gets the promised inheritance, but in doing it he makes many false starts, and every false start means a laugh.—STUART GIBSON.

Goldwyn Lays Plans for Big Campaign

IN connection with an early national advertising campaign for its first Marshall Neilan production, "The Strangers' Banquet," from Donn Byrne's novel, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will post a six-color twenty-four sheet poster in twenty-nine of the biggest cities in the country. The primary colors are black and red.

The poster was devised and executed by Howard Dietz, director of Publicity and Advertising for Goldwyn, and Hal Burrows of that firm's art department.

The advertising campaign for "The Strangers' Banquet" will begin in December, the release date having been fixed some time ago for December 31.

The poster features the director and the great cast. The heads of 25 of the players make a large border entirely around the 24-sheet, each in a square blocked off by heavy black lines. The portrait of Mr. Neilan is in the centre of the bottom row.

Closes First-Run Showings for "Shadows"

LEON D. NETTER, special representative for the Al Lichtman Corporation, returned to New York this week after a three weeks' trip through the Middle West.. He visited a number of important distributing centers including Washington, Pittsburgh, Toledo, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati and Louisville as well as other cities where Harry Charnas handles the Lichtman output.

Netter closed several important deals for first run showings of "Shadows," the second release of the Lichtman organization. Beginning December 10th, Phil Gleichmann of Detroit will exhibit the picture at the Broadway-Strand. Other first runs contracted for through Netter include Louisville, Dayton, and Cincinnati.

"Hungry Hearts" Pleases Critics

Goldwyn Production Approved After Screening at New York Capitol

GOLDWIN'S production, "Hungry Hearts," based upon Anzia Yezierska's volume of short stories of the same title, was screened at the Capitol Theatre, New York, this week and was received by the critics of the New York newspapers with the same enthusiasm that the reviewers on the motion picture trade journals had accorded it earlier after seeing it at private screenings.

"'Hungry Hearts' registered an emphatic hit," wrote Robert E. Sherwood in his review in the New York Herald. "It possesses many of those rare qualities which go to make up a great picture."

Rose Pelswick in the American said: "An appealing picture—a vivid account of immigrant life, with an understanding blend of humor. Rose Rosanova, as the mother; Helen Ferguson, as the daughter; Bryant Washburn as the young lawyer, and George Siegman, Otto Lederer and E. A. Warren are extremely well cast."

R. W. Baremore, writing in the Telegraph, said: "'Hungry Hearts' is the best thing since 'Humoresque.' This Goldwyn feature presents by far the finest cast of types seen in any film that we can recall."

The Journal of Commerce critic said: "Takes its place with the best of the year's screen offerings by virtue of its outstanding qualities of heart interest and amazing realism. It has drama and emotional intensity, an appealing love story and an abundance of humor."

E. V. Durling in the Globe: "'Hungry Hearts' is one of the finest things of its kind ever done with any medium of expression. The magnificent literary efforts of Israel Zangwill, Fanny Hurst and Montague Glass along similar lines are all surpassed by this screen portrayal. As a motion picture it is far better than 'Humoresque'."

Journal: "Although the trend of the play is dramatic, there is a light love theme and a number of amusing situations. The entire production is appealingly and sympathetically handled."

"Plunder" Latest Pathe Serial

Pearl White Famous Star is Back With Pathe in Exciting Chapter Play

"PLUNDER," produced and directed by George B. Seitz from the scenario by Bertram Millhauser and himself, rounds out a list of about twenty serials for Pathe in which Mr. Seitz has figured either as scenarist, director or producer, and in many instances as all three.

The story of "Plunder" is said to flash upon the screen the highlights and shadows of New York, its splendor, its squalor, its adventurous characters in high finance with its inevitable slum and criminal ramifications, with its undercurrent of appealing romance harking back to Hendrik Hudson and Captain Kidd.

The motive of all its startling complications, its dangers and deeds of ferocity and of courage, is an immense treasure buried centuries ago in a deep cave above which now towers one of the city's loftiest and most massive office buildings.

None but the owners of the building can authorize the feats of engineering necessary to secure the treasure, and they are many. But only three of them have knowledge of the treasure. It is their conflicting efforts to gain control that precipitate the series of astounding adventures with which the action with its feats of physical daring is replete.

Pearl White, as the heroine, is one of these three—a rich New York girl of the out-door athletic type, courageous and resourceful, possessed of an insatiable love of adventure. She is said to move through the episodes in what would be the spirit of "a combination of Cleopatra and Joan of Arc."

"The Shiek" Has Record in Australia

THE longest continuous run of a motion picture in the history of Australia, and one of the longest on record anywhere, recently came to an end at the Globe Theatre in Sydney. At this house, one of the largest in Australasia, "The Sheik," a Paramount picture with Rodolph Valentino and Agnes Ayres, ran twenty-four weeks.

To add to this already notable achievement, the picture was transferred five blocks away to the Lyceum Theatre, where it continued to show for six more weeks, a total of thirty consecutive weeks.

Novelties Prepared for "Only a Shopgirl"

Novelties for the exploitation of "Only A Shopgirl" are being added every day. Work has gone

Listed among these are balloons of varying shapes and sizes imprinted "She may be Only A Shopgirl but she'll keep you up in the air." There are also shopping cards for the women and memorandum cards for the men; two colored blotters; shopping bags; soap, properly imprinted; wrist watch give aways for tie-ups with local department and jewelry shops. It is also announced that two-color heralds are in process of preparation.

The twenty-four sheet is said to be something brand new—being an interesting study of a lineup of the members of the cast silhouetted in character against a bright colored background, the whole effect being

"Tess" Packs Two L. A. Houses

Overflow Crowd So Great Additional House Is Necessary For Showing

WHEN Fred A. Miller of the California theatre, Los Angeles, booked Mary Pickford's brand new production of "Tess of the Storm Country," a United Artists Corporation release, he knew he had a big picture that was going to draw big, but he didn't expect to have to throw the California overflow into the Miller theatre and pack that house also.

But that is what happened. The Los Angeles public crowded into the California and jammed around it so persistently and continually that Mr. Miller had to do something to take care of those who clamored to see Miss Pickford in her new "Tess of the Storm Country" and couldn't get into the California.

So he sent another print into Miller's theatre, and there he sent the overflow from the California, filling both houses to capacity at every showing of this crowning achievement of Mary Pickford's career.

"Fashionably gowned society women wept and raucous-voiced laborers declared 'that's the best picture I ever saw in my life,' when Mary Pickford's brand new production of 'Tess of the Storm Country' was shown at the California theatre," said the reviewer for the Los Angeles Evening Herald.

"Mary Pickford's second edition of 'Tess of the Storm Country,' a de luxe rendition of the earlier popular favorite, loses nothing of the finer imaginative flavoring of the initial narrative, but has the further joy of polish in pantomimic expression by an exceptional cast, of the latest improvements in cinematic art, photographically, directorially and as to possibilities in settings generally," said the critic of the Evening Express.

"A film with a heart and a magical feeling for beauty, Mary Pickford's new 'Tess of the Storm Country' is one of the outstanding achievements of the year," said the critic fo rthe Los Angeles Times.

"The new 'Tess of the Storm Country' is far more beautiful than the old, in settings, photography and acting," said the review in the Record.

"Dr. Jack" Is Highly Approved

Latest Harold Lloyd Production Wins Same Commendation as "Grandma's Boy"

LOS ANGELES newspaper reviews of the Mission theatre premiere of Harold Lloyd's new five-reel comedy, "Dr. Jack," are pervaded by an atmosphere of unqualified appreciation. Doris Anderson, writing in the Los Angeles Examiner, makes use of the following expressions in the course of a lengthy article:

"Nothing is more significant of the increasing popularity of the motion picture comedy and its laudable development from pies to profundity than the advent of a Harold Lloyd picture. The opening of 'Dr. Jack,' his latest, at the Mission Saturday was the occasion of Managing Director Harry David roping off his lobby for the crowd and of great rejoicing.

"This picture is another score for Lloyd. Were it his first long comedy, this would not be nearly as indicative of the comedian's originality as it is coming after the immense success of 'Grandma's Boy.' An initial achievement in any art can be largely accidental. But the result of 'Dr. Jack' proves that in the former production Lloyd conscientiously set a standard for himself, which he was willing to have stand forever as a stern comparative test for all his future productions."

"For that tired, run-down theatre-going feeling—'Dr. Jack,' alias Harold Lloyd," says the Los Angeles Evening Herald. "One dose of the effervescent, electric, effulgent, energetic, edifying, ecstatic, ennui-destroying film comedian and you are at once a new fan again."

"This is Lloyd's second five-reel production. 'Grandma's Boy' was his first, and Hal Roach, producer of all of Lloyd's works, had a good hunch, it would appear, when he suddenly switched his star from two-reelers to the full-sized features. At any rate, 'Grandma's Boy' took the film world by storm, and now 'Dr. Jack' bears all the earmarks of success."

"Bill of Divorcement" Honored

Review Board Places Feature on Select List of Exceptional Photoplays

THE National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has given the Associated Exhibitors feature, "A Bill of Divorcement," the highest possible rating by placing it in its select list of "Exceptional photoplays." Associated has fixed December 24th for the release of this feature, which is a Denison Clift art production.

In the November number of Exceptional Photoplays, the National Board's publication, is a critical review of "A Bill of Divorcement," from which the following is an excerpt:

"Here is a motion picture, made from the play of the same name, which last year met with great success here, both at the hands of the critics and the public, which lives up to the purpose of the dramatist as to the integrity of the theme which it handles. It is done without recourse to motion picture hokum and without compromise with the censors.

"The picture is chiefly outstanding because it is honest in its wares and, being such, bears so little resemblance to the great run of pictures where the show window has come to be expensively decorated in order to show off some French-jewelry plot. The picture is a good example of how the fine dramatic text of a play, utilized with discernment in the form of spoken titles, can carry photographed action and make it stir with dramatic forces.

"As the girl who gives up her betrothed and her happiness for the sake of the human race, and dedicates her life to the care of her father, who has been afflicted with insanity, Constance Binney does the best work of her career. She has seized the character of this girl whose head is stronger than her heart, with a convincing grasp, and the part in her hands becomes a finished criticism of the curley tressed type of girl hung on wires by American producers for the advancement of a sweet and hopeless screen drama.

Special Messengers for Metro Production

In order to meet the showing dates of several first-run exhibitors throughout the country, Metro Pictures Corporation has engaged the services of several special messengers for the purpose of delivering prints of this S-L Special in person.

When Mr. Frowenfeld, who carried the first print of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" from California to New York recently, has been dispatched to Washington, Baltimore and Atlantic City for the purpose of bringing the "Quincy Adams Sawyer" films to first-run theatres in each of these cities, additional messengers will take this picture to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago and Detroit.

Warners Have Extensive Plans

Will Make Eighteen Productions From Popular Stories For 1923-24 Season

WITH the completion of "Little Church Around the Corner," and the Harry Rapf production of the Charles G. Norris novel, "Brass," Tarry M. Warner announced that eighteen pictures will be made for the season of 1923-24 at a cost of $5,000,000.

Production of "Main Street," the Sinclair Lewis novel of rural America, the seventh and last picture to be made this season, was begun last week at the Warner coast studios. Monte Blue, who has been placed under a long term contract, has been cast for a prominent role in this picture. Mr. Blue recently played one of the leads in the production of "Brass," which was directed by Sidney Franklin and adapted for the screen by Julien Josephson.

According to Mr. Warner the concern is at present negotiating with several of the foremost directors in the industry, and expects to sign one to transfer the Sinclair Lewis story for the screen. The production will be made on an elaborate scale, and it is said that upon its completion the entire organization will concentrate upon the plans for the eighteen pictures.

From present indications the eighteen productions will be made at the west coast studios. In accordance with the present policy of the Warner organization, the stories will be adaptations of popular novels and stage plays.

The majority of the books and plays are said to have been secured, and with the consummation of several other deals an official announcement will be made. To carry out the production plan the foremost directors, scenario writers and screen players will be engaged for these pictures.

Detroit Sees "Kentucky Derby"

Universal's Picturization of Popular Melodrama Reported Well Received

"THE KENTUCKY DERBY," Universal's picturization of Charles T. Dazey's melodrama, "The Surburban," had its premiere in the Detroit territory last week when it opened in the Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit. Despite unusual opposition it is reported to have done wonderful business.

Immediately after the opening night, Phil Gleichman, manager of the theatre, wired Carl Laemmle, head of the Universal organization, congratulating him upon the value of the picture.

"'Kentucky Derby' opened yesterday in my theatre to a wonderful business," reported the exhibitor. "Production well represented with suspense and smashing thrills. Audience greatly pleased, as manifested by rounds and storms of applause of crowds when race horse scene was shown. Strong opposition of 'Robin Hood' and 'When Knighthood Was in Flower.' Congratulations."

The picture was equally well received by the press, according to reports which have been received by Universal. The Detroit Free Press was enthusiastic over the thrills and general entertainment value of the film. Its account read in part:

"There is an exciting series of thrills at the Broadway-Strand this week. Even the old-timers who make up the Sunday crowds were sitting on the edges of seats and gasping in astonishment. Shipwrecks, sensational rescues and a spirited horse race are all part of 'The Kentucky Derby,' the screen version of the famous stage thriller, 'The Surburban'."

"The Kentucky Derby" recently had an auspicious opening in the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, where it was hailed by the moving picture critics as one of the most entertaining pictures of the season.

"If you crave excitement, you will get it in 'The Kentucky Derby.' If you like suspense, and thrills, and pathos, it is all there—and enough of each to satisfy you," wrote the Herald-Examiner reviewer.

"'The Kentucky Derby' is frank melodrama, and good entertainment for that very reason," said the Chicago Evening Post.

From all quarters Universal has received reports of praise for the great racing thrills in the picture and for the excellence of the actors, especially Reginald Denny, who takes the leading role.

The racing thrills in "The Kentucky Derby" are supplemented by actual scenes of last year's Kentucky Derby, at Churchill Downs.

"Till We Meet Again" on Big Circuits

The assertion of Associated Exhibitors officials that the William Christy Cabanne production, "Till We Meet Again," with Mae Marsh, is attracting an extraordinary demand for bookings at the very outset of its exhibition career appears justified by the list of theatres and circuits that already have displayed the feature or are arranging for early runs.

Within a few days of its release, "Till We Meet Again" started on its round of both the Loew Circuit, which includes Marcus Loew's leading houses in Greater New York, and of William Fox's best theatres in the big city. The Stanley Amusement Company secured it for its several houses in Philadelphia, and Southern Enterprises booked it for runs throughout its extensive circuit stretching all the way from Atlanta to Texas.

Ambassador Gives Praise to "Oliver Twist"

Sir Auckland Geddes, British ambassador to the United States, has written an enthusiastic approval of "Oliver Twist."

The day after a special screening in Washington Sir Auckland wrote to First National representative in Washington:

"Please accept my grateful thanks for the great treat you afforded the members of this embassy last night. The presentation of 'Oliver Twist' is a notable one, not only for the beauty of its photography, but for its artistic restraint and the admirable way in which details have been studied. I feel sure the film should attain popularity in England, where I understand it is to be sent shortly."

Many Endorsements for "One Week of Love"

UNSOLICITED endorsements of the latest Selznick production, "One Week of Love" are being received daily both at the home offices in New York and by President Myron Selznick at the Selznick Studios in Los Angeles, according to a statement made by David O. Selznick in a recent interview.

"Among the letters we particularly prize," said Mr. Selznick, "is one from Mr. Rupert Hughes addressed to Myron Selznick. Mr. Hughes says, in part: 'Rarely have I enjoyed a picture more than "One Week of Love." It opens with great vivacity and brilliance, then suddenly develops a situation that seizes and holds to the last moment. Elaine Hammerstein * * * meets every situation with remarkable power and restraint. Conway Tearle gives a magnificent performance. The conflict between the two characters * * * gives the picture high dramatic value. The production is gorgeous in its interiors and majestic in its landscapes. The photography and titling are perfect.'"

"A Woman's Woman" Wins Praise

"Women will enjoy it. So will men," said the critic for the Examiner when "A Woman's Woman," an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release, was shown recently at the California theatre, San Francisco.

"The story of 'A Woman's Woman' is a good story, and so is the picture. It doesn't slacken up for a minute," said the critic for the News.

"'A Woman's Woman' tells in dramatic fashion the story of what might be the home life of the average American family. There are many highly emotional scenes in the play, which has been exceptionally well directed and produced in proper atmoshere," said the reviewer for the Call.

"'A Woman's Woman' is a film that should work a benefit for the home, and particularly the home where the mother is not appreciated to her fullest worth," wrote the critic for the Bulletin.

"It is a well made picture and has Mary Alden for the star," said the Chronicle's critic.

"Forgotten Law" Well Received

Production Made in San Francisco Is Hailed as Credit to Coast City

"THE FORGOTTEN LAW," a Max Graf production made in San Francisco, received an enthusiastic ovation by newspaper critics when it made its world premiere at the Warfield Theatre, in the same city in which it was produced. Reviewers on the dailies praised the photoplay as a contribution to screen art, apart from their natural interest in it as a home product. Here are some of the extracts from reviews of this Metro release:

"Scored a big success . . . The Graf people . . . are entitled to congratulations for the excellent work they have turned out. They should be proud of it. And San Francisco should be proud with them . . . the picture is worthy of all praise strictly on its merit as a piece of screen architecture. It would be difficult to improve on the cast . . ."

—San Francisco Call and Post.

"The picture is well made and is acted with virile power by a good cast. It is a credit to San Francisco and to Graf Productions . . . The crowd applauded heartily . . ."

—Chronicle.

"The dramatic story . . has been effectively put into the film . . . Milton Sills gives a clear, strong portrayal. Is a picture that will prosper on its own merits. I recommend it to all theatregoers. Every San Franciscan should see it."

—Examiner.

This photoplay was produced under the personal supervision of Max Graf. It was adapted by Joseph Franklin Poland from Caroline Abbott Stanley's novel, "A Modern Madonna." The direction was by James H. Horne.

Elinor Glyn Picture Well Liked

"The World's A Stage" Meets Approval of Reviewers of Trade Papers

PRINCIPAL Pictures Corporation's initial release, "The World's A Stage," with Dorothy Phillips and an all-star cast, was given a rousing sendoff by the critics of the trade press last week following a special showing. This Elinor Glyn story, as one writer so well phrases it, is "one of the revelations of the year," and will "make the box offices of motion picture theaters of the country tingle with prosperity."

The Moving Picture World critic said that in view of the unusual interest taken by the public in the domestic affairs of movie stars, as evidenced by the notoriety given them by newspapers, "could not help but register as a distinct box office hit." Then he went on to praise the individual acting of the players, praising Miss Phillips, whose services were obtained by permission granted by Associated First National.

Motion Picture News' reviewer was equally enthusiastic over "The World's A Stage" and also predicted a successful run for this production, which he characterized as "sure-fire," brimful of action and clever acting.

Exhibitors Trade Review was also liberal in its praise, particularly concerning the story, while the Morning Telegraph characterized it as one "of the very few truly great pictures of the year."

Exchanges who have acquired territorial rights to "The World's A Stage" already report heavy bookings, according to Principal Pictures. Gene Marcus of Twentieth Century Exchange of Philadelphia this week signed the entire Wilmer & Vincent circuit for this feature.

"Monte Cristo" Elected to Family Group

The Better Films Committee of Atlanta, Ga., considered by many as the voice of the most conservative picture element of the South, recently issued its endorsement of "Monte Cristo," the special on the current release schedule for Fox Film Corporation, and elected it to the "family group," according to a letter received by GGeorge R. Allison, Southern District Manager for Fox. "The picture was very splendidly fine and the entire cast well selected. We recommend this picture for the Family Group."

Six First Nationals on "Exceptional" List

SIX attractions released by Associated First National are among the twenty on "Pictures worth waiting for" listed in "Exceptional Photoplays" issued by the National Board of Reviews for November.

Marshall Neilan's picture, "Minnie," a First National December release, heads the list. "Minnie" is reviewed in this issue of "Exceptional Photoplays" and the author writes: "The picture could not have been made by anyone else, and no one else will be able to imitate it, because it has individuality and style."

The other First National attractions mentioned are:

"Oliver Twist," "Lorna Doone," "Brawn of the North," "The Masquerader," and "Day Dreams," a Buster Keaton comedy.

New York School Head Praises "The Mirror"

Unstinted praise for "The Mirror" the novelty reel being released by Universal for the International News Reel Corporation, is contained in a letter recently received by R. V. Anderson, sales manager for International News, from Ernest L. Crandall, director of Lectures and Visual Instruction of the New York City school system.

"Thank you so much for the courtesy of permitting us to show the release of "The Mirror" last night at our Visual Instruction dinner," wrote Mr. Crandall. "It was a revelation to many of our guests. Once more Universal has scored a distinct advantage."

"The Mirror" series consists of one-reel releases, each containing interesting pictures of events which happened from 15 to 30 years ago. Mirror No. 1 showed McKinley's inauguration, Mirror No. 2 the San Francisco Fire, and Mirror No. 3 "The Birth of Aviation."

Nigh's Next Feature May Be in Colors

Film Guild Product for Hodkinson Due for Release After New Year

GREAT satisfaction has been expressed by the officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation relative to the announcement of the acquisition of the Film Guild series starring Glenn Hunter.

Following on the heels of other important announcements that have been made and will be made, it is stated by the Hodkinson organization that the distribution of the Film Guild product is another significant step forward in the rapid advancement of the Hodkinson program. It is understood that quality will be the demand for all subjects to be distributed through this organization. The Film Guild product consists of four feature attractions featuring Glenn Hunter and supported by a cast of well known dramatic artists. The series will consist of "Second Fiddle," with Glenn Hunter and Mary Astor, from a story by Frank Tuttle; "The Lap of Luxury," by Townsend Martin and Frank Tuttle, with Glenn Hunter and Martha Mansfield, and Percy MacKaye's Salem witchcraft romance, "The Scarecrow." The fourth picture will be announced later.

These pictures, it is stated by the Hodkinson Corporation, will be released early in the New Year. Each and every one according to reports is a worthwhile production of merit with a variety of settings and plots.

Cameras Hum at Universal City

Production is Now at Peak at Coast Studio Center; Specials Under Way

SEVERAL productions of wide appeal are being edited at Universal City. All star casts and directors whose names are big in the professional world are being engaged for the making of forthcoming screen stories of superior merit, it is reported.

Activities in the editorial department include the final polishing of "The Gentleman from America," starring Edward (Hoot) Gibson, "The Prisoner," a George Barr McCutcheon story starring Herbert Rawlinson, "The First Degree" and "The Bolted Door," starring Frank Mayo, "The Power of a Lie," with an all star cast headed by Mabel Julienne Scott, Maude George, David Torrence and Earle Metcalf, and "The Ghost Patrol," with an all star assemblage of favorites including Bessie Love, Ralph Graves, George Nichols and others.

Preparations are being made for what Universal terms "the most elaborate picture ever made." The sets alone will entitle it to this standing it is claimed. The cast is headed by Lon Chaney, and will be directed by Wallace Worsley. It is Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," considered by Universal the finest screen material of all the older classics, and written into screen continuity by a team of widely known scenario experts — Perley Poore Sheehann and E. T. Lowe, Jr. The Cathedral of Notre Dame will be reproduced at Universal City and will be the most impressive structure ever built for the screen.

Stuart Paton is directing an all star cast with Wallace Beery, Estelle Taylor, Forrest Stanley, Nick de Ruiz, Nell Craig, Sylvia Breamer, Josef Swickard, Martha Mattix, Vera James and other famous players in "The Attic of Felix Bavu," a foreign play by an American, Earl Carroll, which is being made into a Universal-Jewel special.

"Nanook" Suggested for Hall of Fame

Have motion pictures attained a degree of excellence which entitles truly distinctive examples to places in a Hall of Fame? This question is discussed in a recent article in the New York Herald from which the

"Sometime, perhaps there will be a Hall of Film Fame. Probably when that is opened the movies will have progressed so far beyond their present standing that none of the pictures which have been produced before now will deserve a place in the archives of posterity.

"It seems to us, however, that there already have been pictures with legitimate claims to greatness."

From a list of fourteen outstanding familiar picture successes, one is singled out and analyzed as especially deserving—"Nanook of the North."

"So far as we are concerned," the writer says, "it is one of the first choices."

Your Projection Department a Decided Asset or Liability

Actual Example Cited Where Theatre Loses Patronage and Prestige

HAVE you, as exhibitors, ever stopped to consider just what percentage of your theatre's drawing power should be accredited to your projection? And also whether this percentage is a negative or positive factor.

It is safe to say that relatively few have done so, otherwise the "horrible examples" of poor projection would not be apparent in such prominent numbers as they are today.

There arises a most serious question whether the exhibitors who tolerate imperfect projection actually realize the conditions as they exist in their theatre or else fail to realize the great detriment such conditions impose on the popularity of the house.

Loss of Patronage

An actual example where a decided loss of prestige and patronage for a theatre was experienced is cited with the hope that exhibitors reading this article will take stock of their own particular case. Parallels to the following are every day occurrences.

In a small city not far removed from the largest metropolitan center of this country, the writer attended, in company with a few friends, the showing of a picture of unusual merit. In fact, this particular picture at that time was being hailed by the industry as the best drawing card in release.

The prologue was good, as was the music. In general, all indications were for an enjoyable evening's pleasure. The reverse proved to be true.

The picture appeared on the screen with the light of such uneven and low intensity that the first few feet of introductions were entirely lost. Immediately after that a decidedly apparent ghost wandered from top to bottom and from side to side of the screen. In time the projection improved in a degree but the improvement was not sufficient to warrant even the term "tolerant" being used in description of the projection.

The general illumination continued low, the picture persisted in jumping around and, to lend variety, the film broke twice, permitting a glaring white screen for the audience to view. The matter of punch holes and misframes which frequently made their appearance during the show seemed in place with the general quality of the presentation.

But the remarkable part was the effect on the audience. Every one was uneasy in their seats and generally dissatisfied with the entire show.

As the writer was naturally interested in noting these effects, several remarks made by the audience were overheard that might ordinarily have passed unnoticed. These remarks conceded the picture to have been "improperly photographed"; "hard to see"; "jumpy"; "hard on the eyes" and "tiresome to watch." Very few seemed to know exactly the source of all their discomforts.

Effect on Audience

As a result of this unbearable projection, to which a feature of unusual merit was submitted, the picture lost its appeal to the entire audience. But that was by no means the greatest loss when taken from an exhibitor's viewpoint. As an illustration of the direct effects resulting, my friends were unanimous in their condemnation of the theatre and picture. In some way or other they all felt they had been mistreated. And that was exactly the case. They had been mistreated, so had the picture and, even though responsible himself, so had the manager.

The above is cited only in an effort to bring forcibly to attention the dire harm done by imperfect presentation of the picture on the screen. Pictures potentially of excellent quality revert to the common place through poor projection. The popularity which might well be enjoyed by a theatre which has good music and other commendable physical qualifications in addition to the booking of good pictures is nullified through this one inexcusable fault. Poor projection should not be tolerated under any condition, any place, or any time.

There is absolutely no reason justifying a single instance of imperfect projection if the proper precautions and selection of modern apparatus is made.

Faults Inexcusable

The projection machines manufactured today are mechanisms that perform with remarkable fidelity and precision. Unsteady pictures are only due to lack of the proper attention to the projector or else to the use of an antiquated projector.

Hazy pictures with improper definition can usually be traced back to the projection lens. Lenses of excellent characteristics are now made and should be employed with no exceptions.

Low intensity of light on the screen producing a dim, undefined picture which tends to cause eye-strain, headaches and generally to detract from the presentation in such a degree as to often utterly ruin the effectiveness of the picture, is not excusable under any circumstance. To insure a well lighted screen which has an illumination evenly distributed over its entire area it is only necessary to make an intelligent selection from such apparatus as the high intensity arc, ordinary arc or Mazda lamp equipment. Control apparatus such as motor generators, converters, rectifiers and transformers provide the adequate and proper power for the operation of the various light sources.

If only the exhibitors would stop and

German Efficiency in Their Laboratories

Claims Developing and Printing Machine Replacing Ten Men, Also 400 Stills Per Hour

By Jerome Lachenbruch

THE passion for efficiency which made the old Germany a precise military machine and may still save the new Republic from disintegration, has not been lessened by external and internal troubles. Yesterday I visited an excellently equipped film laboratory, that of the Aktiengesellschaft for Film-Fabrikation, and came upon an almost completely automatic developing and drying machine. The director of the establishment, Mr. Kurt Washneck, said that one machine could develop, tint, dry and polish about 20,000 feet of film a day, and that each machine required but two men to operate it. According to the old method of dipping films on frames into a developing bath and then fixing and washing, and finally drying on huge drums, from eight to twelve men were needed to complete the same work. The speed of development by the new machine is at the rate of six meters—almost twenty feet—a minute.

Film Not Handled

Besides the tremendous saving in labor, better copies are turned out. Not a foot of film is touched by a human hand during any part of the process, thus insuring the film against thumb marks and scratches. Moreover, during the process the film is at all times in plain view, and consequently one of the men watching it can regulate the development so that it is even from beginning to end.

The machine may be used for developing negative as well as positive; but during my visit a reel of positive print was being developed.

The complete machine is divided into four parts, each for a different stage in the process, yet all so connected that the film is continually moving from one stage to the next, very much like a belt winding through one apparatus, and then being fed into the adjoining one. The developing baths are in a long corridor-like room, and several machines are placed next to each other all the way down the corridor. Above each set of developing baths is a hanging red light, which the workman can pull down (as one does the chalk hanging above a billiard table) to examine the film during different stages of the development process in the dark room.

Diagram showing scheme of seven development stages. Usually the development process is finished in the fourth stage

When the film, which is constantly moving through a series of seven baths, is developed and fixed, it is led through an opening in the wall, over a porcelain spool, to a huge light room where it is washed, tinted, dried and polished. The developing machine in the dark room consists of seven long, groove-like baths, each a little wider than a film frame, and so arranged that they can be individually lowered and raised by the mere turning of a knob. Above these seven developing baths is a system of porcelain spools, over which the film moves steadily through one bath, then is led back through the air over the second spool and then down into the next bath, and so on. The running time of a frame of film through each bath is about one minute; that is to say, seven minutes for seven baths. But a reel of film rarely requires more than three or four baths. Consequently the unused baths are lowered, and the film moves over their respective spools and through the air until it is fed through the hole in the wall to the washing machine. I should mention that before it leaves this room, it feeds into a fixing bath, and then out again—the direction being changed by means of porcelain spools over or under which the film moves.

The operator in the dark room watches the development of the film in each bath carefully. For example, if in bath number 2 the picture shows up too clearly for this stage of the process, the operator lowers bath number 3—temporarily—and immerses this over-quickly developed strip only when it shall have reached bath number 4. In this way evenness of development is obtained, and cameramen's errors in exposure may be partly rectified.

When the film, completely developed and fixed, feeds through the wall to the large, light room, it enters a high, rectangular machine (in form like a large wardrobe), with the front made entirely of glass. Within is a system of spools similar to that in the developing baths. However, in this apparatus the film runs vertically, whereas in the developing process it moves along a horizontal plane.

Tinting Baths

Coming out of the rinsing bath, the film is fed over the tinting baths, which are exposed, and then into the large, glass-encased drying and polishing machine. The tinting process is extremely simple. On a series of steel supports several small pans, about 5 x 8, are placed side by side, each containing a different color solution. These baths are niched on two opposite sides so that a road, which runs through a spool, can fit into them. The rod and spool are then placed across, let us say, the orange bath. Now the film is led under the spool, which compels it to go through the color solution, and up again on the other side, where it travels over another spool, is sprayed with running water, and then enters the large drying case.

One of the economic features of the drying machine is that one doesn't have to heat an entire room to an unpleasantly warm temperature. The film continues to wind its way over a series of felt spools within the drying machine. These spools, being of felt, also polish the film. They are placed in series at the top and at the bottom of the machine, and the film fed vertically from top to bottom, then up again to the next series, and so on, until it is finally wound on a reel. The film then is ready for presentation.

Film is not developed in short lengths, but in long reels, so that the process is continuous and the mechanics do not have to stop to feed new strips every 400 feet. The advantages of this method of developing are, to repeat, cleanliness of operation, evenness of development, speed and absolutely unmarked copies, besides a great saving in labor power.

Combining Operations

Mr. Washneck, the director of the laboratory that uses the method, at first thought of combining the developing with the printing process, but came to the conclusion that the two operations could be better carried on separately. To combine the two operations would mean merely the feeding of the film to another room. But for practical purposes this was deemed no advantage. I may say that their printing machines are far less efficient than the Bell & Howell type in use in American laboratories.

Efficiency in this German laboratory doesn't stop with machinery. It extends even to the building itself and allows for accidents. For, instance, the laboratory building is a cement one-story structure, with a cellar only a few feet below the street level. Around this cellar is a broad alley-way—the building is constructed around a court—which insures light and air to the lower floor. In this cellar, film is stored in small cement vaults that are heated through holes in the floor and kept at the proper temperature. However, the outer walls of these vaults are constructed about one-third as thickly as the inner ones, the floor or the ceiling. The reason for this is that in case of an explosion, the outer wall, facing the alley-way around the building, would be blown out and the rest of the structure not greatly damaged.

Another device that was new to me, exposed, printed, developed, fixed, and washed scene stills and photographs at the rate of four to six hundred an hour. This is the speed for 12 x 15 scene stills; smaller photographs can be turned out of the machine more quickly. They feed out of the machine in long strips

White matt glazed Terra Cotta with green inserts — GLADSTONE THEATRE, KANSAS CITY, MO. — EDGAR P. MADORIE, Architect

High-class Entertainment Within!

THAT'S the clear message of the Gladstone Theatre to passers-by. Its inviting, prosperous-looking exterior promises a good performance—advertises the entertainment within.

Theatre owners everywhere recognize the definite value of an attractive theatre exterior. The problem is to construct such a theatre front economically. But this problem disappears when Terra Cotta is used. For by means of this effective material any theatre may be given striking attractiveness at moderate cost. On the Gladstone Theatre, the plain brick fields are relieved and the whole exterior given interest and character by means of Terra Cotta trim—mainly white, but touched here and there with green.

Terra Cotta can be used either for trim and decoration, or for the entire facing. It will construct a simple design or an elaborate one. Its use opens up a whole field of possibilities in unusual color effects, for it has a practically unlimited color range.

Experience shows that for its cost, Terra Cotta returns greater artistic value in form and color than any comparable material. It is permanent; fadeless, waterproof, and fire-resistant. If it gets soiled, it can be easily cleaned with soap and water. We shall be glad to tell you more about Terra Cotta, and why, with its three fundamental qualities of beauty, permanence, and economy, it is especially suitable for building motion-picture theatres.

Grauman's New Hollywood Theatre Has Individuality Embodying Unusual Features

Hollywood, the home of the motion picture production of the country, is on the map now as a premier town, placed there by the opening of Sid Grauman's new Hollywood Egyptian theatre.

The new Grauman temple of the cinema art, like Sid Grauman himself, has individuality. It is different from anything else in this country. Furthermore, the policy adopted for this new theatre also has individuality, being an innovation in that it provides there shall be but two performances daily, every seat reserved at each performance and each program to run as long as patronage demands.

The architecture of the new theatre is decidedly Egyptian. The entrance to the theatre, copied from the gateways to Egyptian palaces during the days of Cleopatra, is forty-five feet wide and 150 feet long. A high garden wall circles to the right, bearing hieroglyphics and varied designs. At the base of the wall, a massive fountain sparkles amid palms and ferns. Across the forecourt are numerous foreign shops, with stairways which lead to their roofs. From the courtyard, the entrance leads into the lobby of the theatre under a gigantic colonnade. The lobby, seventy-five feet wide and twenty-five feet deep, with its ceiling twenty-four feet above the mosaic floor, opens into a curved foyer leading to the aisles of the auditorium which is 118 feet long and 116 feet wide. There are 1,760 seats. A night scene at a ruined temple beside the Nile is painted in oil on an asbestos drop.

The stage, which has been built with the idea of producing any kind of show, is 30 by 73.6 feet, and is flanked by large columns, two on each side. These columns are six feet in diameter. A model of the Sphinx rests between these, and above, hidden from view, nestles the organ chamber with its Wurlitzer instrument.

At the gallery end, Grauman has installed more than $5,000 worth of projection equipment. The Hollywood theatre, constructed by Meyer & Holler, has been built to withstand all of the elements. The principal support for the roof is an arch with a span of 114 feet. This bears a load of 1,500,000 pounds. Twelve other arches, webbing out over the roof, rest upon the principal member of the building. Half of these are in the high roof, the others in the lower portion, all of which are supported upon a reinforced concrete truss directly in front of the proscenium arch.

The electrical lighting system of the theatre is in three colors, controlled from a dead face switchboard on the stage.

Optimistic On Business Outlook

O. F. Spahr, vice president and manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, sounds a strongly optimistic note after a careful survey of trade conditions during its recent trips to central west cities, including Cincinnati, Kansas City, Omaha, Detroit, Cleveland and others.

In all these cities Mr. Spahr came in close contact with exhibitors and found that business already has improved to a considerable extent, so that it is much better already than it has been for many months past and that every indication points to a continued healthy development, which promises permanent prosperity for theatre men.

Better business has greatly encouraged exhibitors in the cities mentioned and much interest in new equipment is shown, and this is very encouraging to manufacturers of projectors and supply dealers as the exhibitors are already ordering new equipment, and as the great majority of them have been economizing for more than two years and not installing any new equipment, it is a certainty that there will be a heavy buying movement to replace worn out projectors and other equipment.

"Although we are prepared to handle even a greater business before the winter is over," Mr. Spahr said, "business with us is already excellent, and at present our factory is running overtime. Another thing that we are highly pleased with is the class of projectors being ordered, most of the orders calling for our highest price motiograph De Luxe machine with the big arc lamp and arc control. This shows that exhibitors realize that high-class projection is a business builder and are willing to spend real money to get it."

Finke Western District Manager for Automaticket

Besides the ownership of the Automaticket Destroyer, the Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Company of New York is to be congratulated upon the splendid addition to their staff of D. H. Finke who is well known throughout Detroit and the western territories. Mr. Finke has been made Western District Manager for the above mentioned firm and has his headquarters in Detroit, Mich. Among his various other accomplishments, Mr. Finke has undertaken to help the Automaticket distributors to educate exhibitors all over the country to the tremendous importance of using the Automaticket system for the protection of their cash receipts and its value for handling the public, who unconsciously turn toward the "better service" places. Among the numerous new theatres just opening which have purchased the new standard Automatic Ticket seller are the Ritz, New York; the Twin theatres, Jersey City and the Claridge theatre in Montclair, N. J.

"The Troy" Soon Ready for Opening

The new theatre which will be known as "The Troy," becoming another of the Strand chain of houses, is scheduled to open about January 1. A force of plasterers from New York City is now busily engaged on the interior. The theatre was designed by Thomas Lamb, the New York architect, and when completed, will cost about $400,000. It is a downtown house, and will have a seating capacity of about 1,600 persons.—Grant.

Your Attnetion

This week we are publishing as the leading story in the Technical Section an article dealing with the need of good projection in the theatre. If the projectionists will turn their attention to this article they will find that it deals entirely with the responsibility of good projection that is placed on the shoulder of the exhibitor and in many cases justly so. However, in cooperation alone is the main factor that will improve the general screening of the picture in any theatre. The projectionist who can secure no cooperation through the management is seriously handicapped and vice versa, the management who finds it impossible to enlist the aid of projection department is in the same position.

There is no factor which can have a more decided influence on the cause of failure of a theatre than that of projection. The most excellent of pictures may well fail to interest an audience if improperly screened. The popularity of the motion picture in this country therefore depends in a great degree, in its last analysis on the projection department. This department may make a poor picture passable or an excellent picture impossible. Every projectionist should stop and consider the importance he plays in the general uplifting and popularizing of the picture with the general public. Take your individual case and study it from every angle. Just where do you feel that a most decided improvement could be made in the perfection of the finished product on the screen as it appears in your theatre? Possibly it's a matter of proper apparatus in which case it will be necessary for you to prevail upon your manager for the purchase of the required apparatus. Possibly it may prove to be in your case that in your theatre the management is one of the many that fail to realize the importance of perfect projection and it therefore makes it possible for the projectionist to be of real service not only to his profession but also to this whole industry.

It is naturally assumed that those who will take the trouble of endeavoring to improve the general type of apparatus used in the projection department will take every precaution to insure the very best projection with the apparatus that they have available. The light on the screen is undoubtedly one of the most annoying and detrimental factors in the improper screening of the picture. It simply spoils the feature. The photography appears to be poor. The matter of detail loses its effectiveness and the eye strain and general discomfort encountered by the audience proves both distracting and a source of annoyance, the result being that the more discriminating clientele withdraw their patronage.

Once Again

Quite some time ago we inserted an item in this department calling attention to one, Clifford Paris, of 107½ North Summitt Street, who, in remitting the required amount for a league button, forgot to give the city and state in which he lived. The only other information we have is that Mr. Paris is employed in the Strand Theatre which is managed by D. W. Shepp of 125 S. Summit Street, also without city or state.

In an effort to put Mr. Paris on the membership list of the National Anti-Misframe League we are again calling his attention to the above and trust that we will receive the necessary information at an early date.

Our Hobby

The matter of punch holes and misframes have naturally among those members of the N. A. M. L. received particular attention. This work among the members is a most commendable factor and is appreciated in more instances in this industry in general than is probably realized by those who are actually doing this good work. However, we feel justified in again calling the attention of all those who read this article to the importance of the matter of misframes and punch marks. Their elimination is absolutely essential for the proper presentation of any picture.

Possibly no better method is available of determining the relative quality of projection than that of comparison. This method, of course, is only adaptable in case a criterion in projection is available to the projectionist. In a great many instances the projectionist fails to realize that he is not securing anything but the very best results. Whenever possible get the opinion of anyone who is in a position to have seen projection in various sections of the country.

In closing it is recommended that the projectionist read the opening article of the Technical Section in this issue and place themselves in the position of the exhibitor. Many statements are made concerning the exhibitor which may well apply in many instances to the projectionist.

Details Needed

Dear Sir:

Enclosed please find two application blanks for your league, one for myself and one for my assistant, also fifty cents for two of your buttons. In order to save you postage you may send them both to my house and I will see that he gets his. Both of us gladly agree to your pledge and if you don't believe me you should hear me chatter when we get a print that is punched full of holes. I make it a practice and see to it that all imperfections are marked and taken out directly after the first afternoon run and all of our picking up is done either by title or scene cues.

Although I have been in the game only about a year and a half, I have charge of the booth in a small neighborhood house in a city of 36,000 people and take great pride in keeping my two Powers 6Bs in the best of condition and projecting a picture that is as good if not better than the average.

My great trouble lies in getting a steady light at the beginning of each pick-up. Our line for the theatre is only a 110 volt A. C. line and as both machines come off this line I have to be very careful and judge my time, for I can only keep both machines lit for approximately ½ a minute or I will blow the fuse. Am using 60 amp. A. C. at the arc. Have any of your members any suggestions that would help me.

I know practically nothing about your organization except what I have read in the News and that seemed to me to be enough for I get some very valuable information from shall thank you very much.

Very truly yours,
ROLAND M. ARCHIBALD.

Medford, Mass.

Regarding the trouble which Roland Archibald is having with an unsteady light on the screen, would suggest that this member write in more detail concerning the apparatus which he has and the conditions under which this is used, enabling a more definite solution for his trouble with the light. There is nothing more annoying and irritating to an audience than an unsteady light on the screen excepting, possibly, very material imperfections in the film which this organization is striving to eliminate.—Editor.

J. L. Carter and R. M. Martin in their fireproof projection room at the Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, Tenn.

We have been informed that Local 312, Enid, Okla., will hold election of officers at regular meeting in December. New lodge rooms were rented in the Criterion Theatre Building. H. G. Creekmore is projecting pictures at the Rialto theatre, Enid, and he is getting very pleasing screen results with two Power's 6A's. e has been operating at this theatre for the past many years.—Trout.

Fireproof Department

The Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville's "Picture Palace," which is under the management of Theo. D. Mousson, recently installed two of the latest model motiograph projectors, with fire-proof magazine, fire-shutters, or automatic shutters, driven by motors.

The projection room in the Knickerbocker is equipped with a Hetmer motor generator. Should the motor generator at any time become bad tempered and feel indisposed, the projectionist merely switches over to the mercury arc rectifier, which furnishes him also with direct current for his machines. The projection room in the Knickerbocker is also equipped with fire-proof boxes which hold the reels of films not in use on the machines so there is no possibility of them catching fire. Hanging close on each side of the battery of two machines is a Pyrene fire extinguisher, which has more than proven its worth in projection rooms.

The projection room of the Knickerbocker is built of solid concrete, six inches thick. Each of the doors and small window in the room has a shutter which is at all times raised, but immediately a fire breaks out these windows automatically close, so that it is next to impossible for a fire to reach the auditorium of the theatre. All of the wires in the projection room are enclosed in conduits, so that at no time does the projectionist come in contact with the live wires. The projection room at the Knickerbocker is in charge of J. L. Carter and R. M. Martin, two expert men who are familiar with every detail of projection, having had years of first hand experience in this work. The Knickerbocker, is now, and has been, since Mr. Mousson took charge, one of Nashville's popular motion picture theatres. Manager Mousson has done more for the theatre in the way of beautifying it than any manager heretofore mentioned. It is now classed as the pride of Nashville's best.

Advantages

Westinghouse Two-Arc Multiple Motion Picture Motor-generator Equipment is not only a dependable source of direct current for the projection machines, but more—it provides for operating the projection machine, stereopticon, and a spot or flood simultaneously. # Palm Beach Has New Theatre That Rivals the Best

THE Stanley theatre, West Palm Beach, Florida, is undoubtedly one of the finest along the East Coast and combines the lure of art, of poetry, of music, of literature, of science according to the imagination and spirits of the individual. Although the Stanley theatre is a marvelous proof of the solidity and strength of modern architecture, one cannot get away from the feeling of it being centuries old, defying the ravages of time, this feeling, without doubt, coming as a result of its reconstruction of an ancient style Spanish church.

The outside of the building, with its Spanish coat of arms, imposes against the blue of the structure, the wrought-iron balconies, the small window panes with their iron trimmings and orange and black awnings. The lobby, with its massive pillars, tile roof and quaint medallions show that every detail of decoration and construction has been carefully worked out. The potted plants of arbor vitae stand on either side of the foyer, and the soft amber lighting from polychrome fixtures are copies from the antiques of the middle ages. The delicately shaded floor lamps throw rays of light which blend with those of the ceiling and reach to the rain spots on the walls. These walls are a reproduction of walls of a medieval church. The room is enriched with stone carved benches and hand carved frames in soft gray and blue where pictures of coming events are shown. On the left is the ladies' lounge in charge of a competent maid, who will see to the ladies' special wants. A mirrored door lets mi-lady view herself from tip to toe.

A little door to the right of the ladies' lounge leads to what is known as the paper room. This is of a private nature where films, bill posters and other theatrical accessories are kept. On the right of the foyer is Stanley C. Warwick's sanctorium. A little to the left of Mr. Warwick's office is the gentlemen's lounging and smoking room. From the foyer a sloping aisle leads to the auditorium. At the head of it are two stone reliefs filled with cut flowers which will be changed as they wither. On either side are plastic effects ensconsed in ivory against the colorings of the thick walls of the balustrade, and at the foot the gorgeous forms of two cupids, cast in stone. Coming into the auditorium two balconies are discovered, one on either side, with delicately wrought screens in old iron and scores of polished columns from which peal forth chords of extraordinary harmony. The organ loft was designed especially for this organ, which has already gained supremacy over all other instruments of its kind along the East Coast.

The proportions and architecture of this beautiful theatre and the colorings of the ceilings, walls and woodwork cannot be too highly praised. High upon the walls, twenty-four stained glass windows flood the interior with a beautiful shaded light, while under them, standing solemn and mysterious, are heavy columns of stained concrete. The woodwork is all in pecky cypress that artistically attests its ancient glory. The seats are upholstered in Spanish blue leather and the floor from foyer to stage is covered with Everlastic tiling in two shades of gray with black insert and plain black border. Scattered along the aisle are tiny lights which give just enough light for entering and getting comfortably seated. The whole building is a wonderful imitation of old Spanish architecture and a show house of which West Palm Beach may well boast.

German Efficiency

and have to be cut apart. The advantage of this method is that all stills are exactly alike and even, and that it saves time and labor.

The plate from which the prints are to be made is placed on top of the apparatus, which looks like a large phonograph cabinet. Over the plate, and suspended from the ceiling, a powerful lamp lights up upon the pressing of a button, and goes out automatically when the plate has been exposed a sufficient length of time. The sensitized printing paper is fed from a roll, and the feeding timed with the length of time required to expose each print. When the paper has been exposed it is led through the developing, fixing and rinsing baths inside the machine. Finally it appears through a long, horizontal slot where a girl stands and cuts the stills into perfectly even size. Only two people are needed to run this machine: the mechanic, who understands its operation and takes care of the exposures, and the girl who handles the stills when they come out of the machine ready to be packed for shipment.

Colored Lamps an Important Feature

The matter of colored lighting in the theatre is undoubtedly the most important feature and many exhibitors fail to appreciate the potential advantages that lie in this direction. The many various and delicate shades of colored light that can be applied to the different sections of the theatre should be experimented with by every enterprising management. For instance, a golden glow has a suggestion of warmth which on a cold, stormy night lends a home-like touch to the entrance of the theatre. Naturally, the reverse is true in the summer months when a blue light is characteristic of coolness. Pure colors of the highest quality naturally give the best results.

The above are a few of the suggestions that have been brought forth through the study of color made by the Perma Color Lite Products Corporation who are manufacturing colors and frosts for all theatrical purposes. This particular line of specialty is being handled by the Behrend Motion Picture Supply House, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

Your Projection Department

consider the preponderance of the effects on the general popularity of the theatre and also realize the simplicity and comparative ease with which good projection may be assured there would be no imperfect projection.

The matter resolves itself into a task of permitting the exhibitor to realize that perfect projection is an all-important function necessary to secure the best returns from any particular theatre. The word "permitting" is purposely used, as it is highly probable that in many instances the exhibitor would remedy any adverse conditions if only they were realized. The exhibitor needs to place himself in the position of an audience to permit a correct perspective of the general existing conditions. When the same routine is encountered every day, the same troubles and state of affairs, there is great danger through the failure to appreciate lack of perfection.

Comparison is an excellent method of judging. That is, if the comparison is made to a high standard. Every exhibitor should at least give careful thought and study to his projection department and make such changes as to insure the criterion. Don't bother asking the question,

"Can I afford the cost?" because you cannot, under any conditions, afford poor projection.

The theatre owned by John Marlowe will be among the hondsomest in that section of Illinois, when Mr. Marlowe finishes alterations and improvements arranged for. ## Royal Theatre, Wilmington, N. C., Closes

Bad business has forced the closing of another Howard-Wells theatre in Wilmington, N. C., The Royal Theatre being closed after the present week. It seems that this section of the country has never recovered from the slump which hit there about eighteen months ago but the theatres have managed to struggle along the best way possible. This will leave but two picture theatres open in Wilmington, the Grand and the Bijou; the Victoria theatre playing legitimate attractions, which, by the way, are meeting with little success in that neighborhood.

"Good Prints Guaranteed"

What a wonderful opportunity awaits the film distributing organization that can declare in its advertising and its sales talk:

"Every —— Company print you get is a good print!"

And then, after saying it, carry out the promise.

This seems a minor matter to the film man whose horizon is bounded by New York's Times Square or Chicago's Loop.

But there are thousands of small exhibitors who would arise to cheer the man or the company that would make good on that slogan—every time, and in every territory.

There are thousands of exhibitors who give strong consideration in their booking to this fact: That experience has shown them that in their particular territory such-and-such an exchange is most efficient and takes most pride in the condition of its prints.

There's no "way out" for the small-town exhibitor who has had to force a butchered print on his patrons. He suffers, he knows it, and he must face the music personally.

A mutilated print of a million dollar picture is worth thirty cents less than nothing.

"Robert E. Welsh in Moving Picture World, Nov. 4, 1922"

The guarantee back of Standard Prints is our assurance of satisfaction. The daily service of the Standard Film Laboratories on our last picture was beyond criticism. Standard Prints are the best in the market.

Popularity of "Tess" Should Extend Through Generations

MARTIN J. QUIGLEY, in Following Review, Says New Pickford Film "Will Go on Year After Year, and Is Deserving of It"

Comment on Mary Pickford's "Tess" might properly be confined to a few words. With equal correctness, volumes might be written. It is necessary only to say that what "Way Down East" was to the stage for several generations, "Tess" will be to the screen. On the other hand, a huge task would be encountered if one were to set out to deal fully and consistently with this production. It would take a deft wielder of words indeed to do justice to the consummate art of Miss Pickford except in a very lengthy document.

We shall not be surprised if Miss Pickford's new production of the famous story of "Tess of the Storm Country" becomes the most popular picture ever made. We do not view it as one of those sensational and timely successes which creates a great furore for a moment and then quickly shifts away to make room for another similar sky-rocket hit. This picture is almost here to stay; it will go on year after year—and it is eminently deserving of it!

How has this miracle of the amusement world come about? The answer is chiefly Mary Pickford and partly John Robertson, one of the most able men in the directorial profession. And Miss Pickford, great as she is, has by no means attempted to carry the story alone. On the contrary, she has surrounded herself with a cast of even merit and a tremendously fine production. There are a number of views of sheer gorgeousness and the whole production is decidedly creditable.

In the first place, "Tess" is an ideal story for Miss Pickford. It is difficult to conceive that there has been or that there will be another story which suits her so well and to which she is so well suited.

We think that this new "Tess" should be scrutinized by the most competent dramatic critics of the day in order that authoritative opinions might be written into the history of the drama which we believe would place Miss Pickford with the few really great actresses, past or present. Her pantomime is wholly marvelous. Apparently with no effort she is able to register what she means to convey with an astounding swiftness and certainty. There is a conspicuous absence of reaching after effects which results in her work carrying with it the highest degree of conviction. She proves very pointedly in "Tess" that she is the peerless player of the screen.

In several of Miss Pickford's recent pictures there were flashes of her real artistry, although a few were on the whole somewhat disappointing. The dual role of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," for instance, was a worthy attempt but the result was not altogether satisfactory. In "Tess," however, there are no lights and shades; she is brilliant throughout.

Another scene from "Tess of the Storm Country" (United Artists).

Miss Pickford's "Tess" is a human story that points a fine moral but the moralizing effect is accomplished automatically and without any sacrifice of entertainment. It is a story that is brimful of sentiment, pathos and humor. It is, perhaps, not the sort of thing that drama league enthusiasts get excited about nor yet is it what the ultra-sophisticated seek in the theatre. But we doubt that there is any normal person from nine years to ninety who cannot find in it great interest, entertainment and inspiration. If there be such the wrong is with them and not with the picture.

The story is a real test of the leading player's skill. From the start as a rollicking waif she is quickly swept through almost the entire gamut of human emotions and nowhere does she falter in the least. She brings a tear or a laugh with equal facility and in her tragic moments she is awe-inspiring.

The picture is beautifully executed. There is a great deal of pictorial charm about it and there is a very graphic impress of technically fine direction upon it. For Mr. Robertson it comes as a worthy successor to his splendid achievements in "Peter Ibbetson" and "Sentimental Tommy."

The supporting members of the cast measure up to the responsibilities of their selection. Lloyd Hughes as the "hill-topper" who succumbs to Tess' charms presents a manly and sympathetic figure. David Torrance as his father is splendid. Other very good characterizations are given by Jean Hersholt, Forrest Robinson and Robert Russell. The photography by Charles Rosher is distinctly notable.

Mr. Myron Selznick,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

My Dear Mr. Selznick,

Rarely have I enjoyed a picture more than "One Week of Love." It opens with great vivacity and brilliance, then suddenly develops a situation that seizes and holds to the last moment.

Elaine Hammerstein, as a beautiful flapper abruptly plunged into a wilderness of dangers, meets every opportunity with remarkable power and restraint. Conway Tearle gives a magnificent performance with the effect of a volcano, silent but ominous. The conflict between these two characters, one a reckless girl, the other a reckless brute, and the resulting influence of each on the other, give the picture high dramatic value.

The production is gorgeous in its interiors and majestic in its landscapes. The photography and titling are perfect, and the picture ought to have great success with the public.

Sincerely youre,

Rupert Hughes

Rupert Hughes writes:

"Rarely have I enjoyed a picture more than 'One Week of Love'"

As you see, it isn't so much that another critic has pronounced "One Week of Love" a great photoplay as it is that this noted writer, himself a producer of motion pictures, should lay aside his own important affairs to sit down and voluntarily type a word of praise for the production.

We liked his letter and are proud of the picture that inspired him to write it. Almost every mail brings us letters of appreciation from personages the country over.

ARTHUR S. KANE, PRESIDENT

"CONQUERING THE WOMAN" presents Florence Vidor in the most delightful and whimsical role of her career.

In a word, the story of how a perplexed father cures his strong-willed daughter of the "high-falutin' notions" acquired during a sojourn abroad.

He puts her aboard one of his merchant ships and strands her on a lonely island with a young man who had said that women are like high-spirited horses—they must be broken to the bit.

The youth's lack of refinement annoys her. He considers her a rank snob in need of a good spanking.

Complications arise which bring forth a dangerous situation when a foreign admirer attempts to kidnap the girl. Speedy action and good American nerve save the day.

The story is from the pen of Henry C. Rowland, one of the most popular writers for The Saturday Evening Post.

It is a King Vidor Production which guarantees straight-forward direction and excellent presentation.

The supporting cast includes David Butler, Peter Burke, Bert Sprotte, Roscoe Karns, Mathilde Brundage and Harry Todd.

"Conquering the Woman" is in six parts.

and a Triumph for Every Exhibitor

FLORENCE VIDOR, a star who disarms criticism; who never disappoints; who can always be relied upon to attract business.

She won stellar prominence through these very qualifications. She had made amazing strides with every new feature.

Everyone admires her; everyone respects the charm of her womanliness and warms to her radiant personality.

But Florence Vidor is not only beautiful and talented. As an attraction she occupies a place among the mighty. A place she ranks by virtue of box-office performance and honest audience satisfaction.

Today she is one of the screen's most brilliant stars.

THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER

Martin Johnson, intrepid explorer that he is, always may be relied upon for discovering unusual and out-of-the-way parts of the globe. In "Head Hunters of the South Seas" he offers to his public another actual drama of nature —stranger and more interesting than many of the dramas concocted in the minds of frenzied scenario writers. Attention in this production is concentrated chiefly in the Island of Malekula, one of the innumerable islands of the South Sea group.

The picture is fascinating, and certainly holds one's interest from first to last. There are many intimate glimpses of the dusky head-hunters. There also are glimpses of jungle-dwelling dwarfs, weird ceremonies enacted by the savage tribes, even weider manners and customs, and primitive nature in its varied moods. The expedition even succeeded in photographing a volcano in the act of eruption. Accompanying Martin Johnson on this trip was his wife, who adds a welcome touch of womanly grace.

Before Alfonso Was Born

TO get a picture of what popularity 15,000 performances of a play denotes, suppose that "Peg O' My Heart" had been given not in many theatres, but in only one.

Had this been so and the play just winding up its run, the premiere would have been back in 1881, the year of the great white blizzard, the year President Garfield was shot—before the Brooklyn Bridge was opened or King Alfonso of Spain had had his turn at being born.

15,000 performances, given consecutively, means a run of 41 years.

"Peg O' My Heart" on the stage has pleased 15,000 audiences and filled 15,000 box-office cash drawers—in New York and other big American cities, in London, in Paris, in Australia, in the Far East and in Hawaii. It is a world-success. No matter where seen, it wins favor.

So too must the picture, starring Laurette Taylor, the original Peg; and made by Metro with the author, J. Hartley Manners, at hand as an advisor.

Percentage insures your audience liking as well as have 15,000 audiences before it, this true and painstaking reproduction in celluloid of the best-loved story of the century.

Mrs. Simpson May Never Leave Homeburg

SHE plans to, of course, as soon as Mr. Simpson is made head of his department and her son Wilbur is through school.

Mrs. Simpson will go to New York then, buy a hat on Fifth Avenue, dine at the Waldorf, and see some plays with real New York casts.

In Homeburg she has no chance to see the great stage stars. Movies and fifth companies of metropolitan hits reach there. "Peg O' My Heart" played at the Opera House, for instance—but not with Laurette Taylor as Peg. When Mrs. Simpson goes to New York she's going to see Laurette Taylor.

But Mr. Simpson isn't head of his department yet, and Wilbur won't be through school for four years. So Mrs. Simpson won't be leaving Homeburg for some time; she may never. And she wants to see Laurette Taylor —as Peg, especially. So does Mr. Simpson. Wilbur, too, for that matter.

These three people represent your patronage. They, and thousands like them, are waiting to see Laurette Taylor in "Peg O' My Heart." The picture's waiting to be booked.

Selling Angles

WE have often devoted this page to the independent producer and in his behalf, and we shall continue to do so.

We are greatly in hopes that he will read and consider seriously this editorial which is more in the nature of a criticism than the usual commendation.

* * *

"It's all very well," said a distributor the other day, "for you to shout for the encouragement of the independent producer but you and he might consider the distributor once in a while.

"We've got to sell his pictures you know.

"And it's a problem.

"It's so much of a problem that unless he will put selling angles into his picture, we can't sell them successfully and that's all there is to it."

* * *

"I mean," amended the distributor, "that we can't sell them at a profit to the producer. We make money on them—if our arrangements are wisely made. But I have got to the point where I am positively going to refuse to handle these pictures that cannot bring back the production cost."

* * *

This distributor is just about right.

The practical trouble with many an independent producer—and we counsel with many, here in this office—is that they make pictures for themselves rather than the market.

There are, we will say, fine ideas back of them. They are strong dramatically; they portray sincerely; they have literary excellence; they may be artistic triumphs.

If the producer is content to live for art alone, for the joy of expression—and can afford to—fine! The motion picture owes him a great debt of gratitude. But if he expects to make money—or even get his money back in any reasonable time—that is another matter.

The reviewers, especially those reviewing for the public press, enthuse over these pictures—maybe. But, again, these reviews may or may not consider the market angle.

* * *

Just what is this market?

It consists of, say, ten thousand exhibitors.

Eighty per cent of these are in smaller communities. They are not trained advertising men, and even so they are handicapped severely.

The picture is generally advertised to them in the trade press just as any other picture is advertised. They are not told how to put it over; they lack the facilities; or they don't know how. And, anyway, the daily change system only permits an advertising flash; and these pictures have nothing to flash—no big star, no big book or play; no big sensation.

Advertising is the genius of this business.

The name of a popular star or book or play is simply a ready made advertising value. That's why producers pay so heavily for these values. They bring the money back. They count tremendously in this business because flash distribution—the fast uncertain booking of pictures—demands flash advertising.

The big producing companies today know what selling values mean to a picture. They plan pictures with that idea pretty nearly foremost.

And whether it's art or not, or right or not for the proper development of the picture—it is commercially successful.

And the independent producer who sees the thing otherwise is bucking a mighty difficult situation.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

IT'S an important item which comes from London telling us that German films have at last broken down the barrier of prejudice and hate. The British public will now be allowed to see some of the big German productions with which the rest of the world has been familiar for some three years. "Du Barry" Pola Negri's first big screen success, which was known in this country as "Passion," has already been shown in the Scala theatre, where it had a run of three weeks.

The film will be remembered as the first of the German super-productions to be shown in America. It started a Pola Negri boom, with the result that a deal of old junk in which she had previously appeared was rushed into the States by small dealers, and created a generally bad impression. The star is now in California engaged in the production of "Bella Donna."

JOHN S. ROBERTSON is down in Cuba catching exteriors for his initial Inspiration production, "The Bright Shawl," adapted from Joseph Hergesheimer's novel. In the Robertson party are Dick Barthelmess, the star, Dorothy Gish and Everett Shinn, the artist. The latter, who at one time was associated with Goldwyn as an art director, is acting in a similar capacity for Mr. Robertson. Incidentally he illustrated "The Bright Shawl" when it ran serially in The Red Book.

CORINNE GRIFFITH has signed on the dotted line for Selznick and will appear in a series of pictures, the first of which will be "The Common Law," written by Robert W. Chambers. The star has been identified with Vitagraph for the past five years.

NORMA and Constance Talmadge have returned from England, accompanied by their prize winning protege, Margaret Leahy, and are off to the coast this week to start work on new productions. Who is Margaret Leahy? We will tell you that she is a London girl of Irish parentage who has had international exploitation. To show that she must possess beauty and personality, she was chosen from 80,000 girls who entered the contest conducted by the Daily Sketch in London.

This 80,000 was gone over carefully and from this number one hundred girls were picked by twenty committees, composed of mayors, mayoresses, members of parliament, newspaper editors, exhibitors, etc., throughout Great Britain and Ireland. The hundred dwindled to twenty who were given screen tests. And Margaret Leahy won the contest. The lucky girl had the cooperation of modistes, who united to supply her with the latest gowns. She is to make her screen debut in Norma Talmadge's forthcoming production, "Within the Law," which will be directed by Frank Lloyd.

PENRHYN STANLAWS, the artist and director, has started something in the Christmas issue of Screenland. He comes right out and points the defects of our screen favorites insofar as they pertain to beauty of feature and form. None of the top-notchers are spared. Stanlaws, being an artist first and a director afterward, discriminates, naturally, in an artistic sense.

What a pretty little jam this will precipitate. The pretty ladies, taken collectively, will probably condemn him to the gallows. Individually one might say to herself: "Well, my neck is better than So and So's." There will probably be a run on the shops of the beauty specialists in Los Angeles as a result of this frank document. Mr. Stanlaws would have the subjects of his analysis understand that Nature is never perfect. It's charm, personality and talent that count.

THIS is what the Los Angeles Times has to say about it: "The final object of Samuel Goldwyn's visit to California remains a mystery. He admits only that he has plans, but then said, "every man has plans. My heart and soul are in motion pictures as they always were and always will be. The fact that I have discontinued my active connection with Goldwyn's does not mean that my interest in their future has ceased. Quite the contrary. I have a greater interest than ever in the company. I can safely say that I am the largest individual stockholder in the company, and so that clearly defines my belief in the organization's future. In fact, I feel that the Goldwyn company is one of the two greatest picture organizations in the world. It is going right ahead greater and better than ever."

WHEN a resume is made of the year's best performances, Elsie Ferguson's characterization of the pitiful figure of the streets in "Outcast" must be considered as an extraordinary achievement in pantomime. She catches without a single false gesture intruding, the true psychology of the soul of such a character. It is dumb-mute suffering—the soul in search of sympathy—the soul inarticulate. And yet Miss Ferguson is so convincing in her poignant moments that she seems thoroughly alive. It is as if you could step up to the silversheet and touch her and speak to her. It is not only one of the year's greatest performances, but it is one of the greatest performances ever recorded upon the screen. Once in a while true genius for pantomime is expressed which proves that the photoplay is enduring. Elsie Ferguson should feel immeasurably proud of her achievement. A great picture and a great performance.

HOW "The Birth of a Nation" endures! Although a decade has been scratched off the calendar, D. W. Griffith's superb picture still tops them all in its power to stimulate the imagination and arouse the emotions. It carries a vital spark—a fine spirit which can never be obliterated though time sweeps on with its unending change. There have only been two pictures produced since which may be said to approach it in the appeal of its pulse-stirring moments.

The glamour of the Civil War is just far enough removed in the background of history to be irresistible. And the conflict of North and South is potent in its stimulating qualities. In regard to its emotional sweep there will never be another picture like it. It is the heart and soul of America in the making—dear, crude America, as Dreiser would say, lighting the fires of Empire.

Look at the cast! It would be impossible to collect such a bevy of talent in a present day picture. "The Birth of a Nation" established stars and directors. Some of their work has not been approached since they struck out on their own. Henry Walthall's Little Colonel still endures as one of the greatest studies of the screen. It still remains his finest expression. The cast reads like a blue book of Who's Who in filmdom. Miriam Cooper, Mae Marsh, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Wallace Reid, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Long and poor Bobby Harron are players who were firmly established through this vital epic of the silversheet.

Some have carried their torches to the heights—yet none have contributed more vital performances than are recorded here. Elmer Clifton has become a director—so has Raoul Walsh, and Joseph Henebery and Donald Crisp—all of whom have absorbed a great deal of Griffith's technique. Such a galaxy of names makes the picture unique—a work to be appreciated for its interpretation.

"The Birth of a Nation" wasn't the first big picture, but it served as a model for productions which followed. The Griffith method was adopted as a pattern by all directors. They all respected his genius. D. W. lit the torch the light of which carried the photoplay out of darkness.

EDWARD J. MONTAIGNE has signed a new contract with the Selznick Company. It is understood that the contract is for one year's duration. Eddie has perhaps written as many original stories and made as many adaptations as any other scenarist in the business. He is one of the pioneers in the scenario field and his name has appeared as author or adaptor of a great many of Selznick's biggest successes and Vitagraph's best-known releases. His latest original written in collaboration with George Archainbaud, "One Week of Love," has been warmly received and greatly praised. He has just finished the screen version of "Rupert of Hentzau," which Selznick will produce with an all-star cast. In Montagne the Selznick organization has a capable author of proven ability.

INTERESTING information is disclosed by the "Hall of Fame" letters so far received.

Three men, a producer, an exhibitor and an executive, have been named by every juror reporting so far, and the list is 85% complete, except three.

Then comes a list of five who are neck and neck with a little better than a fifty per-cent vote.

A half a dozen more follow with a smaller number of votes. And down at the bottom is a long list, who seem to be out of the race but who will be given honorable mention under a special heading of the Christmas issue of which the "Hall of Fame" is to be a real feature.

The jury list too is an interesting body of men—or rather men and women. They are all "hand picked and good men and true" each one nationally known and fully competent to select the twelve greatest people in the motion picture industry, which is what the "Hall of Fame" is all about.

That they have taken the task seriously is evidenced by the fact that not a single "joke smith" list has been sent in. Many of the jurors admit in presenting their list that they have given the job more time and thought than anything of similar character ever coming to their attention.

The Christmas issue will be worth reading and the "Hall of Fame" will be worth preserving.

Then too "Jimmy" Quirk is going to use it in his February number of Photoplay and "Danny" will feature it in his Year Book.

But it will be in the News, first; issue of Dec. 30th.

THEATRE owners and others prominent in the industry who do not figure on the screen were temporarily transformed into stars last Saturday night when the T. O. C. C. held its third annual supper dance at the Hotel Astor, New York.

Harry Reichenbach was master of ceremonies. Harry is considerable of a wit and he was at his best on this occasion. His remarks brought both applause and laughter as the spot was turned upon the different well known celebrities. S. L. Rothafel provided the lighting effects and between them they pretty nearly carried off the honors of the evening.

Senator James J. Walker and Senator Walter Herrick of Albany were among the dignitaries present and both were warmly greeted as the spotlight was turned upon them. Norma Talmadge and Thomas Meighan were the most conspicuous representatives of the stars.

Much of the success of the affair was credited to the ball committee which was made up of the following; Lee O. Ocha, Bernard Grob, Charles Schwartz, Benjamin Knobel, Morris Needles, Sol Raives, Charles Goldreyer, Harry Brandt, Samuel Sonin, Samuel Schwartz and J. Louis Geller.

Statistics of the Motion Picture Industry

Comparison with 1916 Survey Shows Small House Is Still Backbone of Industry

By L. C. Moen

IN the issue of October 28, 1916, just six years before the present survey, MOTION PICTURE NEWS created a sensation in the motion picture industry by the publication of the results of a survey then just completed by the NEWS, in the form of a postcard sent to exhibitors and by them filled in.

The significant statements which created this furore (including a special meeting of the board of directors of one film company), were:

"Perhaps the most striking fact in the above figures is the preponderance of small houses . . . . 80 per cent of the total are under 650 seating capacity . . . . nearly half of all are even under 350 seats. In other words—the fact will bear repetition—every other picture theatre in this country and Canada has less than a maximum of 350 seats. And the average seating capacity throughout the country is 502 seats . . . .

"The average lower floor admission price, then, is a little more than ten and a half cents and the average upper floor price is a little more than nine cents. The general picture theatre admission price averages for the whole country almost exactly ten and a half cents.

"This is striking evidence of the gain in admission prices. Three years ago a count would have shown undoubtedly the great prominence of the nickel house . . . .

"But still more striking is the fact that the twenty-five cent houses number . . . . less than four per cent of the total."

It is interesting to note that, despite the lapse of six years, the vital facts underlying these statements remain still true, contrary to opinion in some quarters.

Owing to the difference in the questionnaires employed, it is impossible to compare seating capacities directly with any accuracy. In 1916, the sub-divisions employed were: 0-350, 351-650, 651-950, over 950. In the 1922 survey the sub-divisions were: 0-250, 251-500, 501-1,000, 1,001-1,250; 1,251-1,500, 1,501,2,000, over 2,000.

The only point at which the two coincide closely is at 950 and 1,000, and this makes it possible to make this direct comparison:

More than 950 seats, 1916..9.06%
More than 1,000 seats, 1922..8.77%

It will be seen that, allowing for the zone between 950 and 1,000, there has been practically no change in the proportion of houses over a thousand seats.

In 1916, 80% were under 650 seats and nearly 50% under 350. In 1922, more than 90% are under 1,000 seats; about 64% under 500 seats; and about 27% under 250 seats.

Comparing these two sets of figures, it is obvious that, despite the building of "picture palaces," the situation remains fundamentally the same, with the proportions about as in 1916.

Another indication of this is seen in a set of figures which can be compared on a basis of absolute uniformity—the average number of seats per house. These are as follows:

Average number of seats, 1916..502
Average number of seats, 1922..507

It may be safely taken as established, then, that the small house is still the "bread and butter" of the motion picture business, and that the large first run houses are comparatively a minor issue, statistically. Other factors, of course, such as prestige, enter into this from the viewpoint of the distributor, in considering first run houses in key cities.

The increase of five seats per house, shown in the average figures, multiplied by the total number of theatres, would account for the bulk of the large houses erected during the six-year period.

A noticeable decline is seen in the number of days open each week throughout the country. The number open but one day has increased markedly, as also has the number open two days. Three-day houses show a slight increase, as also do the four and five-day houses. The six-day houses have been reduced by one-third, and the seven-day houses but slightly. The exact comparative figures follow:

| | 1916 | 1922 |
|---|---|---|
| Open 1 day ..... | 2.68% | 6.87% |
| Open 2 days ..... | 7.16% | 13.01% |
| Open 3 days ..... | 8.50% | 10.38% |
| Open 4 days ..... | 4.35% | 5.42% |
| Open 5 days ..... | 1.97% | 2.33% |
| Open 6 days .....41.52% | | 30.13% |
| Open 7 days .....33.82% | | 31.87% |

Calculating an average figure from all of these gives this summary:

Average number of days open, 1916..5.5
Average number of days open, 1922..5

This represents a decrease of 9% in play days.

Under admission prices, a marked increase is found. As already stated, the average in 1916 was found to be 10½ cents. In the 1922 survey, the average matinee price scale was from 12 to 28 cents, and the average evening scale, 17 to 36 cents, a considerable gain.

A different scale was used in the two surveys, and the only point at which they can be directly compared is in the number above and below 25 cents. These were as follows:
Charging more than 25 cents, 1916.. 3.88%
Charging more than 25 cents, 1922..16.21%

Striking changes were also found in the number of changes per week. The average length of runs has increased greatly, as shown by the following tabulation:

| | 1916 | 1922 |
|---|---|---|
| 1 change per week ... | 3.08% | 9.90% |
| 2 changes per week ... | 7.61% | 21.54% |
| 3 changes per week ...13.46% | | 24.60% |
| 4 changes per week ...12.28% | | 17.76% |
| 5 changes per week ... | 3.08% | 7.28% |
| 6 changes per week ...36.88% | | 15.43% |
| 7 changes per week ...23.61% | | 3.49% |

Reducing these to a single average figure, we can make the following comparison:

Average number of changes weekly, 1916..5
Average number of changes weekly, 1922..3.5

Summing everything up, the following assertions may be made:

The small theatre is still the backbone of the motion picture industry.

The average seating capacity remains about the same.

The average number of days open per week has declined about 9%.

Admission prices are still markedly higher than in 1916.

The number of houses charging more than 25 cents has increased by more than 300%.

The average length of runs has increased by nearly 43%.

Ballyhoos and Tie-Ups Win Unusual Interest

Every issue of THE BOOKING GUIDE refers to similar exploitation schemes on practically every picture released. The April edition will furnish the date of issue and page number on which they appear in the weekly issues of MOTION PICTURE NEWS between September and March.

Wabash Sector Active in Sunday Closing War

The Sunday closing war at Wabash, Ind., grew in intensity this week. P. H. and William Dickson, owners of the Eagle theatre, opened Sunday afternoon. Sheriff Hoyt Summerland arrested them. He held them in jail three hours. They reopened in the evening and next day were arrested on Justice of the Peace court affidavits, being released on $100 bonds. Trials were set for this week.

Meanwhile the Mayor and Chief of Police talked of swearing in twenty extra police and closing every line of business in the city on Sunday in response to criticism by the theatrical men that it was not fair to pick on them alone.

It was reported petitions were being circulated asking citizens to stay away from church while the fight progressed. It was also rumored impeachment proceedings might be started, but officials discounted it.

While this was going on Martinsville, Ind., was having a little blue law flurry. Charges of violating the Sunday closing law were pending in circuit and city courts against Frank J. Rembusch, owner, and Frank Jewell, manager of the Grace theatre. Churches and reform organizations were behind the filing of affidavits against Rembusch and Jewell by Mrs. Julia Woodward, it was understood.

"Garrison's Finish" for January 15 Release

A DEFINITE release date for January 15th next has been set for Jack Pickford's "Garrison's Finish," an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release which marks Mr. Pickford's formal return to the screen as a star after two years directorial work with his sister, Mary Pickford.

"Garrison's Finish" is based on W. B. M. Ferguson's racing novel of the same title. For its racing scenes it has the actual running of the last Kentucky Derby won by the great Morvich at Louisville, as well as the last Metropolitan handicap at Belmont Park.

Production Abroad Impractical, Says Powers

Film Magnate Sees Complete Victory for the American Distributor

THE production of pictures in Europe by American producers is classified by P. A. Powers, managing director of the Film Booking Offices of America, as impractical, if a high standard is to be maintained. California, believes Mr. Powers, will continue as the producing center of the world. Not only is foreign production impractical, but is unnecessary for proper distribution abroad. The European producer will be unable to survive in face of the terrific competition of the American distributor, whose invasion of Europe is complete. These are the main conclusions drawn by Mr. Powers after a study of conditions abroad.

"So much has been said and written in regard to conditions in Europe," said Mr. Powers, who returned recently from a six weeks' foreign visit, "that I feel hesitant about stating my impressions for fear of repeating any of the articles which have already appeared.

"My short visit to Europe has convinced me of something which I had always considered possible. I refer to the results obtained by the various American producers who have gone to Europe in the hope of making pictures there cheaper than in the United States and who have discovered that economical production in Europe is impossible, if one wishes to maintain a standard equal to American productions.

"The ventures of American producers in European production have shown nothing but failure. They have gone there with the idea that it was necessary to make pictures abroad in order to supply the American market with productions at a price to compete with the foreign product. They soon learned that the lack of proper facilities in Europe more than offset any advantages gained by securing low salaried actors. They found that without the supply of trained motion picture artists available in the United States, it is almost impossible to work to advantage. The time spent in training the untrained European talent adds materially to the cost of productions made in Europe.

"The situation as it is developing in Europe at the present time makes it unnecessary for the American producer to go abroad, as America has already thoroughly invaded Europe with its sales organizations. For instance, in Great Britain today the following producing companies are represented throughout the Kingdom with distributing offices: Vitagraph, Famous Players, Fox, First National, Universal, United Artists and Goldwyn. The establishment of these sales organizations has resulted in practically dislodging the British renter and just at the present time the British renter is short of product, due to the elimination of the above companies' productions from the open market. Ready sale can be had on some basis for American productions not represented in the above list of producers.

"As all the product of these companies has been withdrawn from the open market and is not available to the British renter distributor, he will be unable to survive in the face of the terrific competition from the American distributor, unless he can secure a steady supply of quality pictures. The result is bound to be that the American producer controlling the distribution of films in Europe will also control the production of European pictures or the sale of them to the European exhibitor. This matter evidently has not been taken as seriously by the European distributor as it should be, and I believe it is now too late for him to compete to offset the result of the American invasion in Europe. While this is more apparent in Great Britain than it is on the Continent, it is only a question of a short time when it will be impossible for a European producer to market his own pictures except through an American distributing organization.

"As to Europe having any superior talent not available to America, we must bear in mind that wherever money is, talent is bound to go. This is apparent from the fact that the outstanding director of Europe and the artist considered as the best on the Continent are now operating in our moving picture colony in Hollywood. In other words Europe cannot compete with America in inducement offered to the artist, and if anything is developed in the way of unique or exceptional ability, it is available to the American producer for a price, as it is only the American producer who can afford to pay. The result will be that any talent developed in any part of the world is bound to be secured by some American organization to the disadvantage of the European picture making industry.

"At the present time competition in the motion picture business is world-wide, with all the advantages on the side of the American producer. This is due to the fact that America alone has the dollars, and the dollar today is more mighty than it has ever been in the history of our country. While no doubt there is a strong desire on the part of some producers in Great Britain and other European countries to make pictures of quality that will be acceptable to America, the competition with which they have to contend is of such gigantic proportions that it will require an enormous outlay of money to continue to operate and build up quality pictures. And they would be obliged to market them at a loss until their quality is established. By that time they will find that the European market will be controlled by American selling organizations, who will then control the foreign market. Consequently there will be no means of distributing except through the avenue of an American agency.

"I find a great change taking place in Great Britain in the booking of pictures to exhibitors. Heretofore, pictures were booked a year to eighteen months in advance of showing. At the present time some of our pictures are released in Great Britain almost simultaneously with America under the classification of 'special features.' Some pictures released in this manner have heretofore gone by unnoticed, but now public attention is focused on them by special exploitation, similar to the methods used in this country. This will cause a large number of British distributors heavy losses due to the accumulations of bookings made from a year to eighteen months in advance, which bookings will be cancelled by the exhibitor to take advantage of the public exploitation given to the "special features." This difference in booking is due to the application of American exploitation methods by American distributors who "sell" their productions to the public, thereby practically compelling the exhibitor to book the picture while the exploitation is fresh in the minds of the people.

"The writer has come to the conclusion that motion pictures will continue to be made in Los Angeles, or the greater proportion of them made there for some time. This is not because of any special advantages of climate or light conditions obtainable in California, but due to the many years' accumulations of picture making material and facilities which tend for economical production and quality.

"The only disadvantage apparent at the present time in the location of the picture making industry in Los Angeles is the lack of artists to draw from. No artist will take the chance of a trip to California in the hope of securing employment. At the present time nearly all the actors of any importance in Los Angeles are under contract which guarantees them a certain amount of money weekly. If their contract expires and none other is available they return to New York, thus reducing the number of people available at the Coast for picture work. The result is that the public is obliged to take the same faces and personalities in all of their pictures, as new material is not to be secured in Los Angeles. This has a certain reaction on the public's mind and at the present writing productions featuring a "star" are on the wane, and producers are now casting their pictures, or at least endeavoring to do so, where contracts with the stars do not exist, with what they are terming 'all-star cast.' This naturally is to the advantage of the production, as the story does not have to be sacrificed to conform with the whims and wishes of the featured player. Story material heretofore rejected is made available."

Renovations At Small Cost Results In New House

Territories Sold on "Out of the Inkwell" Series

Several deals were consummated last week by M. J. Winkler with a number of state right buyers for the new series of Max Fleischer's "Out of the Inkwell" comedies. The new series comprises thirteen single reels.

The most recent deals were made with Harold Rodner, who has taken over Greater New York and Northern New Jersey; Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, which has secured the rights to Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, and Peerless Film Service, Los Angeles, which purchased California, Nevada, Arizona and Hawaiian Islands.

The foreign rights to the new series have been purchased by Gus Schlesinger, New York.

Valentino Decision Is Reserved

Appellate Court Withholds Judgment; Star Restrained From Personal Appearances

RODOLPH VALENTINO is probably spending more time with lawyers and in courtrooms these days than he formerly did in the studios.

Among other things his appeal from the injunction forbidding him acting for any but the Famous Players-Lasky organization came up Tuesday in New York before the Appellate division of the Supreme Court. Then, too, that organization blocked his week of personal appearances which he was to make at St. Louis, though he did appear at two showings there Sunday and explained to the audiences his troubles with Famous Players-Lasky.

Decision was reserved in the Appellate Court after arguments by the attorneys for the actor and the producing company. Valentino and his wife were in court.

Marshall explained that Valentino was receiving a salary of $65,000 a year, and compared it with that of the President of the United States. After February 13 he is to receive $2,000 a week, the attorney said, and after February 1, 1924, if a renewal of the option is exercised, his salary would be $3,000 a week.

Valentino's appearances at the Del Monte theatre in St. Louis were the occasions of a bitter attack upon officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

He charged that Famous Players was pursuing a policy of starring him in cheap, minor plays which would tend to decrease his popularity and cause him to be forgotten by the public, while Famous Players would reap large profits from him.

He arrived in St. Louis at 6 p. m. and appeared at both evening performances of the Del Monte. He was greeted by large crowds, girls predominating. It is estimated that more than 6,000 persons passed the Del Monte doors while he was there.

His address had been prepared in advance and he read from the manuscript. His talk was difficult to follow because of his foreign accent, and the fact that he had to refer repeatedly to his notes. He was cheered repeatedly during his ten minutes' speech.

The Del Monte management has inserted large ads in all the St. Louis newspapers fully acquainting the theatre-going public with the reasons preventing Valentino's professional appearance. The theatre had given wide publicity to his coming and it was expected that all records would be broken during his stay at the Del Monte.

Washington Fire Violation Cases Heard in Court

The motion to quash the information against four Washington exchanges accused of technical violations of the fire safety regulations applying to storage of inflammable films, which charges were filed months ago, were heard by Judge John P. McMahon in police court on Wednesday of last week. Arguments for the four defendants were submitted.

Counsel for the defendant corporations argued that construction of the buildings they occupied made full compliance with the law impossible. The motion to quash was overruled by the court, after which an agreement was reached for the defendants to plead guilty and their personal bond was accepted.

"It is understood," says the Star court reporter, "that the defendant companies will make some further effort to comply with the Fire Department regulations."

The defendant companies were the Fox Film Corporation, Goldwyn Film Distributing Company, the Vitagraph Film Company and the Universal Company.

As to "some further effort to comply," representatives of the Fox, Vitagraph and Goldwyn concerns stated that their shipping and storage departments were to be in the new quarters on New Jersey avenue by the first of this week. Fox Corporation officials say they completed their move prior to December 2.

Non-Theatrical Competition Put Squarely Up to Producers and Distributors

MAINTAINING that the practice of booking entertainment films to non-theatrical agencies—schools, churches, settlement houses, etc.—is rapidly developing into direct and serious competition with regular motion-picture theatres and assuming menacing proportions, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Milwaukee have sent letters to all producers and distributors with a request that they curb this growing evil. The letter states drastic action on the part of the exhibitors must be taken if an immediate remedy is not applied at the booking sources by the producers and distributors themselves.

The M.P.T.O. of Milwaukee makes it clear that its stand is not against the booking of purely educational film to non-theatrical institutions but that of the commercial entertainment type.

The problem is squarely put up to the producers and distributors in the following paragraph:

"There is no gainsaying the fact that the producer and distributor as well is dependent for the greater portion of his revenue upon the theatres of the country. Depending solely on the revenue derived from non-theatrical competition would put any producer or distributor out of business. Now then, the question is: Do you as a producer or a distributor feel that you can conscientiously continue to serve non-theatrical institutions with direct competition with your theatre accounts? Do you feel that from a commercial standpoint (that is dollars and cents) basis that it is good business for you to allow this feeling against you to develop among the exhibitors of the country and would it, in the end, be profitable for you to openly flout your commercial accounts (your theatre accounts) by continuing to supply non-theatrical institutions with competitive subjects?"

Exhibitors of Michigan Enter Protests

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan are on record as being in favor of abolishing certain innovations, recently introduced, which they claim are highly injurious to the exhibitor. They write as follows:

"As a matter of fundamental justice, we say that producing companies should not market their products through non-theatrical channels, but should sell them only to the exhibitors. If fraternal organizations and other like bodies are to have the good pictures during the winter months, this manifestly unfair practice will spell ruin to many exhibitors.

"We are unalterably opposed to granting more than 30 days protection on any production, and more than seven days' protection on second runs.

"Our attention has also been called to the fact that in some instances neighborhood houses have asked long protection on other neighborhood houses. The sanctioning of such a request will mean the elimination of scores of theatres upon whom the producing companies are dependent for a portion of their revenue.

"It has also come to our attention that the practice of salesmen bartering contracts between competing exhibitors is still in vogue. This is unfair, unbusinesslike and not conducive to the cooperation which should be maintained between exhibitors and distributors."

St. Louis "Movie Week" Success

Publicity and General Cooperation of Exhibitors Bring Increased Attendance

"GO-TO-THE-MOVIES WEEK" in St. Louis, December 3 to 9, proved one of the most successful affairs of its kind ever staged in any American municipality. Attendance at all of the theatres showed a marked increase due to the stimulus given by the columns upon columns of newspaper advertising and publicity reading matter given to the movement.

Led by Fred Wehrenberg, owner of the Melba and Cherokee theatres and vice-president of the Exhibitors' League of St. Louis, who acted as chairman of "Go-to-the-Movies Week" Campaign Committee, the exhibitors and exchangemen of St. Louis got behind the movement one hundred per cent and put it across with a bang.

The opening gun was a banquet at the Elks Club Saturday noon, December 3, presided over by Wehrenberg and Joseph Mogler, president of the exhibitors' organization. Speakers of the day included William Findly, secretary to Mayor Henry W. Kiel, who represented the city administration; Colonel Phillip Brockman, president of the Board of Police Commissioners; Albert L. Schweitzer, newly elected Prosecuting Attorney; Director of Public Safety James N. McKelvey; Floyd Lewis, president of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade; and Joseph Mogler, president of the Exhibitors League. Telegrams were read from Will Hays, Mayor Kiel and others, who expressed regret at not being in attendance.

Wehrenberg, prior to introducing the speakers, briefly outlined the aims and purposes of "Go-to-the-Movies Week," saying that it would demonstrate to the people of St. Louis that bigger and better pictures are being produced today and that the exhibitors of St. Louis stand squarely behind the movement to uplift the standard of screen entertainment.

Following the banquet, which was attended by some 150 exhibitors, exchange men and others interested in the industry, an automobile parade was held, about 50 machines being in line. It toured the city from north to south and east to west, practically every section of St. Louis being visited by the decorated cars.

In honor of "Go-to-the-Movies Week" all the theatres booked the very best programmes obtainable. The pictures included: "Tess of the Storm Country," "I Am the Law," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Human Hearts," "The Secret of the Storm Country" and others.

King Baggott, a native of St. Louis, also returned to town to help put over the campaign. He appeared at the Rivoli theatre, where "Human Hearts," which he directed, was being shown.

Next Paramount Session at Kansas City

KANSAS CITY will be the scene of the next convention of the Department of Distribution of Paramount Pictures, according to an announcement made at Hollywood following the close of the Paramount sales convention by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and S. R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution.

Both of these officials remained over in Los Angeles when the "Paramount Special" left there with all the other delegates to the convention on board. They planned to remain for at least a week working out with Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the corporation, the important steps decided on at the convention.

Cleveland "Blue Law" Fanatics Busy

The "blue-law" fanatics are working fast in Cleveland. One week from the time that the Cleveland Heights merchants were served with warrants for violating the Sunday law six motion picture exhibitors of East Cleveland and Lakewood, two other residence suburbs of Cleveland, were served with similar warrants. Although only suburban motion picture theatres were attacked, it is significant that the owners of these suburban houses also own houses in Cleveland. In fact, the six exhibitors attacked represent some twenty-seven motion picture theatres.

Those upon whom warrants have been served up to date are M. Silverman, Wind-a-Meer theatre, East Cleveland; J. J. Mellert, Shaw-Hayden, East Cleveland; J. Schwartz, Homestead, Lakewood; Frank Kinney, Lucier; J. Schuman, U-No, Lakewood; Martin Printz, Lakewood theatre, Lakewood. Warrants were issued by Justice Hawkins.

City Manager Charles A. Carran, of East Cleveland, and Mayor L. E. Hill, of Lakewood, are both in favor of Sunday movies.

The exhibitors thus enmeshed in the toils of the law are going to fight the blue law agitators, J. H. Locks and N. D. Davis.

Better Picture Week to End with Parade

"Better Motion Picture Week" will end in a big display of floats representing pictures indorsed by the National Motion Picture League on Saturday, December 9. The parade in New York City will start at Washington Square and proceed up Broadway to 110th Street, east on 110th Street to Fifth Avenue, and south on Fifth Avenue, to the beautiful new Heckscher Building of the Children's Society.

The Children's theatre has been generously donated in order that 350 children from the orphanage and homes of the city may enjoy the great spectacle.

Each float will carry the reels of the pictures represented and the children will draw lots to decide which picture is to be presented to them. The lucky film will them be carried into the theatre with due and impressive ceremony.

Hal Norfleet Made Sales Manager for Anchor

Larry Semon to Terminate Vitagraph Connections

IN a statement from Larry Semon it is announced that he will shortly terminate connections with Vitagraph. The comedy star has still five more two-reelers of his series of thirty-six comedies for Vitagraph, to make before the expiration of his contract entered into three years ago.

Semon's plans include a studio for his own productions but one that he can lease to other producers for any sort of picture making when he finds it necessary to bring his own company on location. Semon also plans on the release of two five-reel features a year along with twelve two-reelers. The "most elaborate settings obtainable" will be secured for his comedy product, it is announced.

Clemenceau Aides Preview "Garrison's Finish"

Jack Pickford's "Garrison's Finish" was given a private screening at the Grand theatre, Pittsburgh, on Monday evening, December 4. A distinguished audience was on hand to witness the showing, including representatives of the city's officialdom and four members of Georges Clemenceau's party. Those of M. Clemenceau's party who were present included the "Tiger's" personal secretary, Louis Le Fire; Robert Remey, correspondent for the Havis Agency; Francois Crucy, correspondent for La Petite Parisienne, and Albert Boulan, the statesman's personal attendant.

"Garrison's Finiish" has been booked for an extended pre-release engagement at the Grand. It will be formally released on January 15 by the Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

Cast Completed for "The White Frontier"

Allen Holubar has completed the cast for "The White Frontier," which has been adapted for the screen by Violet Clark from a novel by Jeffrey Deprend. The original scenes are being taken at Truckee, Cal., and later the company will go to Montreal and the Canadian backwoods for additional exteriors. The interiors will be filmed at the United Studios.

The cast will include besides the star, Dorothy Phillips, Lewis Dayton (as male lead), May Kelso, George Siegman, Robert Anderson, Inez Seabury, William A. Orlamond and Geno Corrado. Lewis Dayton, while hitherto unknown to American audiences, is a favorite of the English stage and screen.

First National Chiefs Start for East

THE First National Executive Committee left Los Angeles for the East Wednesday, according to word received from the coast. Both President Leiber and Treasurer Schwalbe said they had no announcement to make regarding business transacted. The committee meeting was held in Los Angeles to get into closer touch with production.

It is known that many propositions for productions have been made to First National, but no definite answer has been given on any of these, according to the word from the coast.

Cohen Launches Music Tax Fight

Formal Complaints Lodged With Attorney General Against Alleged "Trust"

PRESIDENT SYDNEY S. COHEN and other national officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America made definite moves in Washington Monday to prevent the so-called "Music Trust" from levying tribute on the theatre owners of the country through the medium of its Music License tax.

Formal complaints against the operators of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers were lodged in the office of Attorney General Daugherty and with the Federal Trades Commission, in which the declarations were made that this concern was a combination in restraint of trade and that its processes were prejudicial to the interests of the theatre owners and the public.

Theatre owners from all parts of the United States have entered a protest against the license exactions of this society with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and these objections in concrete form were embodied in the complaints made.

President Cohen met with National Directors H. B. Varner, of Lexington, N. C., and A. Julian Byrlawski, of Washington, and M. J. O'Toole, Chairman of the National Public Service Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in determining the specific form of complaint to be presented.

It is the contention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America that the present copyright laws do not invest the Music Society with the right to make the license fee exactions from exhibitors and that the members of Congress who passed the law indicated specifically that it was not to include in its powers the uses to which it is now being subjected by this society.

That it is a veritable embargo on the free expression of American musical genius and strangles effort in that direction is one of the contentions of the Theatre Owners and in which they believe the public has a vital concern.

The alleged obnoxious methods of the Music Trust representatives, using their assumed advantage to browbeat and threaten exhibitors, and other unbusinesslike elements, were detailed and will enter into such proceedings as will be initiated by these government departments in the matter.

Canadian Service Unit Is Organized

NEGOTIATIONS were concluded this week, whereby a new distributing unit throughout the Dominion of Canada was formed for the purpose of giving exclusive exploitation to the Canadian-made productions of Ernest Shipman. The new organization will be known as the Ernest Shipman Film Service.

The productions will be released at the rate of one a month, the first five scheduled for distribution being "The Man from Glengarry," "Glengarry School Days," "The Rapids," "Blue Water and "Latin Love."

The franchise for this product in the province of Ontario and Western Canada has been acquired by William Cranston, who established the United Artists in Canada; while the franchise for Quebec, the Maritime provinces and Newfoundland has been awarded to D. A. Burpee, formerly with Price, Waterhouse Company, and Maurice West, formerly with Fox Film Corporation and the Mark Brock Enterprises.

Kansas T. O. Clearing Deck for Legislative Battle

Next week a long-delayed tour of the theatres of the State of Kansas will be made by C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. K., in an effort to line up a solid front of support in a legislative battle, which appears inevitable. Following the appointment of the legislative committee last week, the following instructions have been issued to members of the committee:

"You no doubt are familiar with adverse legislation that confronts the motion picture theatre owners in the State Legislature. This year we anticipate some obnoxious bills, which if passed will affect every exhibitor in Kansas. Because of the personal interest you have taken in this regard you have been appointed by the president and confirmed by the board of directors to represent the M. P. T. O. K. in your district. Your wide acquaintance should be utilized to the fullest degree, that these drastic bills may never become state laws.

"As the personal representative of this organization in your district you will co-operate with your assistants in order that the desired results may be accomplished."

New York Exhibitors Being Sued by Music Company

Harry Hall, of Troy, was this week made defendant in three equity cases listed on the Federal court calendar for the Utica term, which starts at once. Mr. Hall is charged with playing music to accompany photoplays in his theatre without permission of the publishers. The plaintiffs are Jerome H. Remick & Co., Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., and M. Witmark & Sons. It is claimed that the alleged violation occurred on September 23.

Three well known motion picture exhibitors in Utica are also being sued by New York music companies. These are W. H. Linton, of the Hippodrome and treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State; Fred Duffy, of the Hibernian, and George Hauf, of the Highland theatre.

"It's a sniper's game," said Mr. Linton, in discussing the situation. "They send us the music and then snoop around to see if we are playing it."

Lichtman Planning for National Tie-up

A national tie-up is now being arranged by the Al Lichtman Corporation to boost "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" throughout the country. The company is negotiating with the publishers of the original Bertha M. Clay novel to print a special edition which will run to about 200,000.

There will be reproduced scenes from the picture and star cuts; type matter relative to the cast and director will be included. One cover will have space for the theatre imprint and another cover for the name of the exchange handling the picture in the territory.

Screen Influence Told by College Professor

MOTION pictures exert more influence upon the young people today than church and school combined, declared Prof. M. V. O'Shea, of the School of Education of the University of Wisconsin at an open forum of the University Methodist church.

"One hour at the movies where colorful liveliness and action are strongly played up produces more thrill than a week in the classroom or church," he said.

Charlie Chaplin and Theda Bara are more closely woven into the lives of today's youth than Washington or Lincoln, he believes.

He further asserted that juvenile court cases are showing the influence of "amorous relations" as featured on the screen.

Pictures Flourishing in Rumanian Cities

The motion picture business is one of the most flourishing industries in Bucharest and other Rumanian cities, according to advices received by the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner Van Norman. The Rumanians are ardent devotees of the movies, and the appeal of the silent drama extends to the remotest provinces of the country.

Exact figures as to the number of theatres in the country are not available, the trade commissioner placing the number between 400 and 500, forty of which number are in the capital city.

Most of the films now shown are not what might be termed up-to-date.

Some theatres show old American films, usually featuring well-known American artists. Such films are not purchased directly in the United States but in Europe at second hand, generally in Paris, Berlin or Vienna, wherever a good bargain offers itself.

One native importing firm, which purchases films in various European countries and rents them to theatres in the larger Rumanian cities, expressed an eager desire to do business directly with American producers. In his opinion, in order to do business profitably with American films, it is highly desirable, if not absolutely necessary, for the government of Rumania and the United States to conclude some sort of a commercial treaty including a provision covering copyright or patent privileges guaranteeing protection to American films in Rumania. He believes, furthermore, that, under favorable circumstances, Rumania could be expected to import at least 50 to 100 American films annually.

Reading Voters Against Daylight Saving

Daylight saving was not only swamped in rural Berks, but to the surprise of those interested, the proposition got an adverse vote in Reading, Pa. The entire 18 wards of the city voted against daylight saving, while the majority in city and county totalled 15,269.

Carr & Schad, Inc., Reading amusement firm, was in the limelight prior to the election. Slides asking the people to vote against daylight saving were flashed at their six theatres and petitions were signed in the foyer and lobby of the theatre. These petitions were sent to City Hall, and turned over to the mayor and council. One petition alone carried more than 6,000 signatures.

"The Bright Shawl," Joseph Hergesheimer's latest book, will be a Richard Barthelmess starring vehicle, most of the scenes being made in Cuba. Maurice Tourneur will put on the screen "The Isle of Dead Ships," adapting it from Captain Marriott's fascinating tale of the sea.

With the release calendar all set until next June and with further releases safely mapped out, Richard A. Rowland, Harry O. Schwalbe and other members of First National Executive Committee have gone to the coast to sign up more independent producers for First National releases.

Nat'l Board of Review Has Xmas Plan for Exhibitor

THE National Board of Review, with headquarters at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, announces a plan designed to secure for distributors the good will of important persons in their community and a possible increase of patronage throughout the year.

The plan is briefly for the exhibitor to select, say five persons in his community to whom he wishes to express his appreciation for their attendance or whom he desires to interest in good films. These names the exhibitor submits to the National Board of Review headquarters, for enrollment in the Board's National Committee for Better Films, together with a year's dues at the rate of two dollars for each candidate selected for membership. The persons whose names are submitted will then be enrolled as Associate Members of the National Committee for Better Films. The Board of Review will next notify the selected members of their appointment and forward them membership cards with the Committee's Christmas greetings. Each newly enrolled member will be told of his presentation by such and such an exhibitor for membership in the Committee for Better Films and informed that they will receive monthly the Committee's Photoplay Guide of Selected Pictures, "Film Progress," and "Exceptional Photoplays."

Lichtman, Schulberg Are Coast Dinner Hosts

Repeating in effect what he had said before he left for the Coast, that the market was not closed to independent producers and distributors, Al Lichtman, together with B. P. Schulberg, discussed the growth of Preferred Pictures and the Al. Litchman Corporation at a dinner given by them at Marcel's Café, Los Angeles, on Monday, December 4. Schullberg tendered the dinner to Lichtman.

About 200 were present, among the guests the list of First National officials who are here from New York; a prominent array of directors and professionals. The guests included Richard A. Rowland, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Gore, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Gore, Mr. and Mrs. Sol Lesser, Mr. and Mrs. Louis B. Mayer, Adolph Ramish, Sam Katz, Julian Saenger, Harry O. Schwalbe, Colonel William N. Selig, Harry Nolan, Edward J. # First National Sales Contest Ends

"Played and Paid For" Business So Good Winners Are Still Undetermined

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL salesmen of United States and Canada have just finished a contest for "played and paid for" business. This was planned by Floyd M. Brockell, who was last week appointed manager of distribution for First National. It began on October 1 and ended November 25. The prizes offered to "pep" up the entire sales force were $300 for the best increased "played and paid for" business, $200 for second best, $150 for third and $100 for fourth, in each district. There being six districts, the total amount of the prizes was $4,500.

The first week's reports showed Alphonsus Gorman of Montreal leading the field, with Lewis W. Carter of Atlanta second; Charles Rammage of Toronto third; Charles F. Harris, Portland, fourth; Fred Wilson of Detroit, fifth; and J. M. Jacobs, Chicago, sixth.

By the end of the fourth week Charles J. Hamal of Salt Lake had jumped into the lead, with Lewis W. Carter of Atlanta still second; J. M. Jacobs of Chicago moved into third place; Fred Wilson of Detroit climbed a peg into fourth place; Alphonsus Gorman of Montreal slipped back into fifth place, and W. C. Cook of Chicago was sixth.

The sixth week found the national line-up as follows: J. M. Jacobs of Chicago, first; Charles J. Hamal, Salt Lake, second; Fred Wilson, Detroit, third; Lewis W. Carter, Atlanta, fourth; John N. Howland, Chicago, fifth; and Alphonsus Gorman, Montreal, sixth.

"Played and paid for" business has come into the First National New York offices so fast that today, with the contest closed, it will take a couple of weeks to decide on the winners.

The First National contest proved to a lot of salesmen that business was waiting for them in many nooks and corners, and it proved also that much that they thought was impossible was easy getting, once they got all six cylinders working in high. Another advantage of this drive to First National was that there is hardly an exhibitor in the United States or Canada who isn't pretty well educated on First National product past, present and to come.

Celebrate Second Anniversary of L. I. Studio

The second anniversary of the opening of Paramount's studio on Long Island was celebrated recently during the filming of a scene for George Melford's new production, "Java Head." While the scene was staged especially for the picture, studio officials joined the merry party between "shots" and made an anniversary celebration of it.

The Paramount studio, which occupies an area of three square blocks in Astoria, L. I., was opened a little more than two years ago. The first company to begin work in the new building was John S. Robertson's "Sentimental Tommy" company.

According to figures from the casting department more than 400 actors and actresses have played principal roles in the pictures made at the studio, and 4,327 people have been hired as extras.

"Down to Sea in Ships" Opens in Philadelphia

Hobart Bosworth's Latest Secured by Anchor

The latest production starring Hobart Bosworth, entitled "The Law of the Sea," has been acquired by the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc. "The Law of the Sea," which was produced by the Motion Picture Utility Corporation, was directed by William H. Clifford and is a five-part story with the principal scenes laid at sea. Clarence Badger wrote the continuity from an original story by Ethel Gillett.

First National Manager Is Showing Way to British

THE Yank is upsetting some hard-and-fast traditions in the British film field these days in the advertising and exploitation methods of Bruce Johnson, First National's Foreign Manager. First, trade shows have been abandoned; and, instead, the First National product is being put directly into the theatres to permit the public to pass upon its entertainment value. And what is considered to be another bold departure is that with the opening of the pictures half-page advertisements are being placed in the leading newspapers. One editor frankly admitted that such advertising was quite beyond his comprehension, but results are justifying the policy, according to word from the First National home-office.

"Smilin' Through," now showing before the British public under the new order of affairs, is playing to unusually big business, it is stated. Other First National productions shortly to be presented to the English picture-goers include "Oliver Twist," "Lorna Doone," "The Bond Boy," "The Eternal Flame" and "The Masquerader." This smashes the long-standing precedent of withholding American pictures from twelve to eighteen months subsequent to their release in the United States.

"Common Law" Is In Production

Myron Selznick Personally Supervising Picture in West Coast Studios

ROBERT W. CHAMBERS' "The Common Law," announced as one of the super-specials to be released by Selznick Enterprises as a part of their 1922-23 offerings, is about to be put into production. The picture is to be made in the company's West Coast Studios under the personal supervision of President Myron Selznick.

Production work will be concurrent with that on Sir Anthony Hope's "Rupert of Hentzau," which is now in the making. The shooting of these two pictures at the same time will make the Selznick company one of the busiest producing organizations on the Pacific Coast.

The cast for the production has been selected in accordance with the announced policy of the Selznick company. Corinne Griffith, Conway Tearle and Elliott Dexter will be co-starred. Other screen artists of unusual prominence will support them. George Archainbaud will direct.

"The Common Law" was written by Robert W. Chambers as a serial novel for one of the big national magazines. It was subsequently published in book form. It also served as a successful vehicle for Clara Kimball Young when this actress was under the Selznick banner a few years ago. In this picture Conway Tearle was also a member of the cast.

In the new production Corinne Griffith, who comes to the Selznick organization after a long service with Vitagraph as a star, will play the leading feminine role and Mr. Tearle will play his old part.

The probable release date of "The Common Law" has not yet been discussed. Production work is being started immediately and the picture will be ready for distribution, subject to the plans of the company, not later than February 15th.

Universal Wins Injunction Case

U. S. Court Sustains Right to Use of the Name of Buffalo Bill in Serial

UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, Inc., by virtue of a decision handed down by the Judge of the United States District Court of Colorado, has won the injunction action instituted by the W. F. Cody ("Buffalo Bill") Historical Pictures Corporation against the release and exploitation of the serial entitled "In the Days of Buffalo Bill." As a result of this decision the picture will be released at once for its showing in the Denver territory, according to word from the Universal home office.

The Historical Pictures Corporation claimed exclusive rights to the use of the name of "Buffalo Bill" in motion pictures, maintaining that they had acquired these exclusive rights from William F. Cody himself. They furthermore declared that they had made and exploited a motion picture based on these rights and charged that Universal had imitated their advertising of "Buffalo Bill," had infringed upon their rights, and simulated their publicity and title. Historical Pictures Corporation claimed redress on the ground that this was unfair competition.

Universal, through its attorneys, entered a denial of these claims. The arguments advanced, as well as the outcome of the case, have an important bearing on litigation centering around the question of motion picture titles and accompanying advertising and publicity methods. Universal's attorney took the broad stand that Buffalo Bill was an historical character and that the depiction of his character and life story was a right not exclusively held by anybody. They pointed out that the Universal serial had for its basis the building of the Union Pacific Railroad, with which Cody was closely associated.

Plays using the name of Buffalo Bill had been staged in New York and Chicago long before Cody thought of entering upon a theatrical career or using the name on the stage, declared the counsel for Universal. It was also pointed out that many of these plays which had been copyrighted had reached the expiration of their copyright term, and that therefore any right and title enjoyed under them had become common property. The term "Buffalo Bill" had been used and published in copyrighted works at least forty-four times and in several motion pictures prior to its use by Universal, it was maintained. Counsel for Universal also asserted that the Cody Historical Pictures Corporatitn had known about at least one of these alleged infringements of their copyright and had made no attempt to enjoin it. Furthermore, it was declared the pictures made by the plaintiff had not been shown for several years.

These arguments were presented to show that the use of the name "Buffalo Bill" by Universal in its chapter-play could not possibly tend to confuse Universal's pictures with the plaintiff's and that there was no unfair competition between the productions of the parties to the case. Testimony was also offered to prove that the advertising employed by Universal was entirely different and distinct, and that Universal had acted in absolute good faith in releasing and exploiting the serial production.

Schrock, Scenario Editor at Universal City, and directed by Edward Sedgwick.

Finkelstein Boosts Clean Pictures

Big Mid-Western Theatre Owner Lauds Hays for His Stand on Better Product

"CLEAN pictures mean not only clean business but clean pictures mean better business," is the belief of M. L. Finkelstein, First National Franchise, holder and member of the firm of Rubin & Finkelstein, Minneapolis, which operates forty-three motion picture theatres, the biggest of which are the Capitol in St. Paul, the State in Minneapolis, and the Garrick in Duluth.

M. L. Finkelstein

Mr. Finkelstein is in New York at present attending to business as a member of the Rotating Committee of First National. He will be here about two weeks. He has been in the motion picture business since 1909. He makes his home in St. Paul and has his business offices in Minneapolis.

"I see that Mr. Will Hays has been preaching the gospel of clean pictures to producers, to exhibitors, to advertising men," declared Mr. Finkelstein. "Well, I for one back Mr. Hays wholeheartedly. The public doesn't want the so-called salacious pictures. Any exhibitor who puts on a salacious picture is digging his own business grave. I say that exhibiting such pictures is not good business. In certain territories an exhibitor may increase business temporarily with a picture that is 'a little off,' but his regular business is hurt. His regular patronage is afraid to come back.

"For the general good of the picture business I believe exhibitors should not support a producer who releases anything but clean, wholesome pictures.

"I have seen the statement printed that the public can be educated to like 'better and bigger' pictures. Believe me, the public doesn't need education. The public demands the 'better and the bigger' pictures. Five years ago the public began to tell theatre owners by their attendance the kind of pictures necessary to gain their patronage. And this has been good for the progressive exhibitor. The big motion picture theatres of today are monuments to the demand of the public for better pictures, for clean pictures.

"No one can hide the fact that we had a very bad summer. But the picture business today is getting back to normal. At least that is so in our theatres. This I believe is due to two causes: better business conditions that are giving work to the workingman (and pictures are the workingman's entertainment) and the excellent big pictures we have had."

"Outcast," Starring Elsie Ferguson, Due Dec. 10th

AS its release of December 10th, Paramount presents Elsie Ferguson in "Outcast," a picturization of one of Miss Ferguson's stage successes.

George De Kruif, of Exhibitors Supply Company, is making an inspection of that company's Minneapolis branch. He expects to be away from Chicago for a week or ten days.

When the De Luxe Theatre at 814 E. 63rd Street, closed its doors Sunday night it ended its career as a motion picture house. The lease, which had been held by Christous and Nichomakous, was not renewed, and the owners of the property intend to dismantle the theatre and utilize the building for store purposes.

Word comes from Wabash, Indiana, that the fight against Sunday movies, being waged by the Ministerial Society, has stirred up a hornet's nest, and that the results have been far more wide reaching than anticipated by the reformers. Following the closing of the motion picture houses two weeks ago, Charles Bolte, chief of police, last Sunday, closed all places of business except restaurants and garages, and next Sunday, it is said, intends to stop city street cars and close up everything of a business nature in the city, including lodge rooms, restaurants and garages. Business excellent. Good box office picture. (Middle West.)

The Ghost Breaker—

The Man Who Saw Tomorrow—

Business was fine, although there was decided comment on "the queer story" the star's popularity pulled them in. Press criticisms kindly. (Middle West.)

The Old Homestead—

This is a big feature and proved popular with our patrons. Business good. (Middle West.)

The Pride of Palomar—

The Young Rajah—

Not up to expectations. Valentino's popularity carried it through. Story didn't take any too well. Receipts fair. (Middle West.)

A capacity week's business with this one, as Wallace Reid is unusually popular here. (Middle West.)

The Face in the Fog—

One of the best of its kind we have had. Brought out much enthusiasm. Full of thrills, great audience picture, excellent business. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Oliver Twist—

Played to good crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Did not do as well as expected for the first half of the week, but finished well. Was given enthusiastic endorsement by Federation of Women's Clubs board. Special potato matinee when kiddies brought gifts for the Thanksgiving baskets; went splendidly. (Middle West.)

Capacity houses. Patrons very enthusiastic. Most of them declared that Jackie Coogan far surpassed anything he had done, even "The Kid." While everybody thought the picture was a splendid piece of work, we heard a few say that they thought Jackie should not be cast in such serious roles, for a while. (Middle West.)

Very fine production, excellent acting by Jackie Coogan. Splendid telling of well known story and still we didn't have big crowds except on Thanksgiving Day. (Middle West.)

The Dangerous Age—

Splendid clean picture with plenty of entertainment value. Played to big business. (Middle West.)

East Is West—

Constance Talmadge a real hit; went over in fine style. Went over with a bang. Let's have more like this one. (West.)

Skin Deep—

Attracted overflow business all week and on Thanksgiving Day broke the record of the house by many hundreds of dollars. (East.)

A good box office attraction. Did a lively week's business. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Kentucky Derby—

A thrilling race story that proved just the thing for patrons of this house. Business good. (East.)

Horsey and a thriller supreme. A really fine audience picture for mixed houses. Made them gasp at times. Good business. (East.)

The Trap—

A real picture. Lon Chaney does some very good work. Excellent returns. (Middle West.)

One Wonderful Night—

Herbert Rawlinson shows to advantage in this one. Business up to average. (Middle West.)

All Night—

METRO

The Golden Gift—

Did fine business last half of a week. Altogether satisfactory. (Middle West.)

Love in the Dark—

A very charming story that went over big for the week. Viola Dana well liked here. Good business. (East.)

Don't Write Letters—

A very nice sort of picture that should please most anywhere. Did very nicely with it. (Middle West.)

The Forgotten Law—

Cannot report business encouraging with this one. (West.)

FOX

Nero—

Did a beautiful flop following the opening day. Folks do not seem to want this spectacle stuff any more. (East.)

Who Are My Parents—

An ordinary picture of its kind. Did fairly well. (Middle West.)

Arabia—

Picturesque in detail and well filled with thrills and cowboy stunts. Well liked. Good business. (East.)

West of Chicago—

Business good for holiday run. Matinee performances were slow. (Middle West.)

WARNER BROTHERS

Your Best Friend—

It drew all right for a program picture, but not as a feature. Was taken off a day ahead because business was dragging. The complaint was that mother pictures are all alike. (Middle West.)

Rags to Riches—

Very satisfactory picture from all angles, including plot, action, continuity, direction and acting. Wesley Barry is a sure drawing card. Splendid business. (Middle West.)

Played to fair business for a week's run but folks didn't enthuse over it. (East.)

PATHE

Nanook of the North—

The house was opened for Thanksgiving week only with this one, which did an average business. (Middle West.)

Doctor Jack—

Fine business, justifying holding over for second week. Management did not think the picture was quite so good as "Grandma's Boy," but patrons thought it was, the box office benefitting accordingly.

ASSO.-EXHIB.

Dusk to Dawn—

Ingeniously handled around mystery and double personality. Well screened; good business. (East.)

Went over fairly well. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

One Week of Love—

Excellent feature with popular stars. Went over big. (Middle West.)

Elaine Hammerstein is popular, as is also Conway Tearle. This one should go well most anywhere. My patrons liked it. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

A Woman's Sacrifice—

Ordinary and therefore didn't do much business. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

What's Wrong With the Women—

Extensive teaser campaign, playing on title, helped put this one over big. Attraction has real merit, so attendance is now drawn merely on strength of title, which had a great drawing power. (Middle West.)

More to Be Pitied Than Scorned—

Regular old fashioned melodrama. These titles fail to draw as they used to, as people want to appear highbrow even if they're not, and these titles are a hark-back to a previous generation. Poor business.

Clothing Shower Tie-Up Wins Space for "Skin Deep"

Louisville, Ky.—Reams of desirable publicity were obtained by the Mary Anderson theatre on "Skin Deep" through a Clothing Shower for the benefit of needy ex-service men.

Through the medium of newspaper stories and special letters sent to the various merchants of Louisville, an appeal was made for new clothing which would be turned over to ex-service men who are in need. The American Legion extended co-operation and participated in the Mary Anderson Courier-Journal Clothing Shower. The Legion Rehabilitation Committee was placed in charge of distributing the clothing secured as a result of the shower. Each merchant who contributed to this drive was given several cards for display in his window attesting the fact that he had participated in the Clothing Shower, as a token of appreciation to those who served.

"Skin Deep" was mentioned conspicuously in all newspaper stories, as well as the window cards which the shower committee gave to merchants. A special American Legion night was held by the Mary Anderson theatre, with the local American Legion Post coming in a body to view "Skin Deep." Mayor Quinn of Louisville was persuaded to attend the showing and make a speech, all of which netted additional newspaper publicity.

Medieval Atmosphere Gotten in "Robin Hood" Lobby

DETROIT, Mich.—Shadukiam Grotto, which is presenting "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" at the Orpheum theatre has created a medieval atmosphere in the lobby and body of the theatre in harmony with the period of the feature.

The panels of the walls of the lobby have been decorated with painted shields bearing coats-of-arms and other heraldic devices. The same decoration is repeated in the frieze. In the body of the theatre the same decorations are again repeated, the stage is hung with dark blue curtains, standards of arms, being placed on either side.

The girl ushers are dressed as pages, the head usher wearing black and white and the others, brown and blue.

The porte-cochere has been painted a medium grey, picked out with gold. Heavy frames of the same color hold the stills, which decorate the front.

"Hick" Exploiteer Gets Self Arrested as Stunt

Traverse City, Mich.—Getting himself arrested four times was part of the exploitation campaign on "The Old Homestead" put over by Walter Lindlar, Paramount exploiteer, and four times Manager Frank Anderson of the Lyric theatre bailed him out.

Lindlar, dressed as a farmer, beard, specks, big hat and all, hired a one-horse shay and drove into the city.

The verdant farmer just couldn't observe the traffic regulations and got run in the four times alluded to. He put up such an argument with the cops that they had to "pinch" him to save themselves. Walter gave his name as Uncle Josh, and pretty soon the police reporters were writing unkind and supposedly funny things about the poor old farmer who got run in.

After the cops were "on," Lindlar and Anderson bannered the buggy to advertise "The Old Homestead," changing the sign each day.

Police Dog Ballyhoo Employed on "Brawn of the North"

Detroit, Mich.—The Capitol theatre, in exploiting "Brawn of the North," used a street ballyhoo of two police dogs with blankets led by a man in a yellow jacket, marking what is alleged to be the first time that street ballyhooing has been used in conjunction with the Kunsky houses. Manager Moule of the Capitol personally sponsored the stunt.

Its real exploitation value lay in a tie-up with the Police Dog Kennels, for every one who asked the ballyhoo artist about the wonderful animals was told that they came from the Police Dog Kennels. It created additional good will and advertising for the picture.

Stucco effect on lobby frame used for "Blood and Sand" used by Paul E. Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland

The Strand theatre, Milwaukee, recently used this striking banner across the front of the house on "The Eternal Flame"

Gas Company Gives Window to "The Eternal Flame"

El Dorado, Kans.—The management of the Gem theatre, in exploiting "The Eternal Flame," made a hook-up with the local gas company, as a result of which a full sixteen-foot window was cleared by the gas company so that one of their Radio heaters could be used in the fireplace. The display was built up to reproduce the set in the picture where the forge and flames are shown in the back of the scrim through the opening doorway. The gas company's layout consisted of four eight-foot strips of beaver board, lashed into shape to give the room effect. The door, fireplace and figures were reproduced, the figures being supplied by cutouts because of the lack of models in town.

A curtain was hung from the back of the door and a forge built out of a tin pan and mounted on a base of a music stand. A 75-watt red lamp shone through the artificial coals, giving the desired effect. From the window above a green light shone, the combination with the red flare below giving a fusing of shades that reproduced the forge set in the picture.

Instead of employing an artist to decorate the walls, the company used wallpaper selected from a local store. The result was a stone wall effect that cost only 40 cents.

Book Ballyhoo Made to Open on "The Masquerader"

MIDDLETOWN, Conn.—A walking book that opened up was the variation on the book ballyhoo used by Manager T. H. Browning of the Grand theatre in exploiting "The Masquerader."

The outside covers were straight display advertising of Guy Bates Post and the attraction at the Grand.

The inside pages were "inspiration" copy giving some idea of what could be expected from the picture, with a half page of straight billing.

The book was four feet high and three feet long, closed. The masked man who piloted it through the streets followed out instructions to stop whenever he had gathered a crowd. The releasing of a clasp made the book open automatically. After the audience had had time to read the billing the book closed up and the artist went along his way.

Gives Out 200,000 Catch Lines on "Impossible Mrs. Bellew"

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Manager Herschel Stuart of the Missouri theatre distributed 200,000 small slips, printed on colored paper, bearing on both sides catch lines for "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," on the day the picture opened. The same catch lines, 40 in number, were used in the newspaper advertising.

Some of them were: Scandal leaves a trail and a stain even on a man's character. Worse luck, this one revolves around Gloria Swanson as "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew"; Married to one man—loving another—no wonder they called her "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew"; It's the sin we have not committed which seems the most preposterous—"The Impossible Mrs. Bellew." Each bore the theatre name and play date.

Flaming Sand Effect Gotten in "Burning Sands" Lobby

JACKSON, Tenn.—Manager A. H. Lynch of the Lyric theatre created an unusually realistic impression of the title in his lobby display on "Burning Sands."

The lobby was draped tent fashion, front, sides and back, with colored bunting and along both sides was special scenery showing camels and palm trees. But the thing that got them was a box of sand sitting in the front of the lobby and actually blazing. The box was shallow with a false bottom of screen wire tacked in at about half the depth. This was covered unevenly with sand and under it sat several cans of Sterno (canned heat), the blaze breaking through the sand in several places. Of course the cans were concealed and the sand was so distributed that it was hard to see the screen wire. The effect was most realistic and caused much attention and comment.

Trick Barometers Employed to Exploit "The Storm"

Sandusky, Ohio.—The Schade theatre put over a well rounded campaign recently on "The Storm."

The first stunt was the distribution of hundreds of trick barometers, cheaply made from instructions given in the press book on "The Storm." The next move on the part of the Sandusky exhibitor was the distribution of a thousand copies of a special edition of a local newspaper, with a red fudge printed across the front page announcing the coming of "The Storm." A score of newsboys were used for this distribution.

A large banner next was hung over the main street of the town, bearing the words "'The Storm' Is Coming," and finally a street ballyhoo man was sent out, clad in oilskins and bearing a huge umbrella lettered with storm warnings. This ballyhoo gave away several hundred small rubber boots.

Genuine relics of early days were dug up by Manager Arthur E. Weld of the Strand theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, for this "Grandma's Boy" lobby display

Paul E. Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland, prepared this elaborate front on "The Dictator," building up heavy arches and carrying out the castle idea throughout the lobby in complete fashion

Salvation Army Drive Tied Up to "Rags to Riches"

Los Angeles, Cal.—Loew's State theatre inaugurated a number of street ballyhoos and a Salvation Army "Rags to Riches" drive in connection with the showing of "Rags to Riches" at that theatre.

For a street ballyhoo Loew's State used a trick buggy with a swayback horse, placing banners on the sides and back. It was driven by a man in rags with another person arrayed in full dress at his side. The buggy was paraded down the main streets three days before the showing of the picture, and during the first two days of its run.

Thousands of kids wearing false faces of Barry and carrying banners paraded the streets, Salvation Army trucks carried banners on both sides, and booths were opened at prominent corners for the public to deposit old clothes. Over 500 window cards were placed in downtown stores. Six-foot cut-out letters outlined with chalk and filled in with shellac were painted on twelve main boulevards leading into the city of Los Angeles. The signs were over a block long, and every person traveling into the city in a machine saw the ad a week in advance of the play dates.

Newspaper tie-ups were secured with every daily in the city. They were conducted along general news lines, being backed up by the Salvation Army officials. This campaign was launched by Clarke Irvine, the Warner coast publicity man.

The Rex theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., reproduced Kipling's "The Vampire" as a big lobby display on "A Fool There Was"

Inch of Film Makes Effective "Pink Gods" Throwaway

JAMAICA, L. I.—A herald which got attention through its novelty was used on "Pink Gods" by Manager Fred V. Greene, Jr., of the Rialto theatre. He obtained an old print of film and clipped inch strips on a card, which read:

"Here is one inch of 'Pink Gods,' A Paramount Picture. You must not miss the other 85,307 inches at the Rialto theatre."

The reverse side contained straight advertising for the picture illustrated by a stock ad.

Greene stood in front of his lobby the night of the opening and checked up on the cards around the theatre. He found about a hundred with the bit of film detached. That shows they were taking notice.

Diversified Campaign Put Over for "Lorna Doone"

Omaha, Neb.—Numerous ways of exploiting "Lorna Doone" were found by Manager Julius K. Johnson when that picture played the Rialto theatre. For two weeks prior to the showing cards were hung up in the public libraries calling attention to the coming of the picture and inviting the public to read the book.

The opening of the food show marked a splendid opportunity to profit by the national tie-up arranged with the National Biscuit Company through a special booth on "Lorna Doone Shortbread," for which Madge Bellamy had posed in a series of photographs. The Omaha retail grocers came in on this brand of co-operation with the result that thirty retail window displays were arranged for with one selling talk.

The Ad-Selling Club was given a talk on "Lorna Doone." Orchestras in the restaurants plugged the song and the music stores backed them up with attractive windows.

The most spectacular exploitation was the street car ballyhoo, used by permission of the local traction company. The usual posters on the car were embellished by a locomotive bell that was placed inside the car and rang continually.

Widespread Publicity Obtained for "Light in the Dark"

Brooklyn, N. Y.—When Hope Hampton appeared in person in connection with the showing of "The Light in the Dark" at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, Edward L. Hyman, managing director, put across a publicity campaign of unusual thoroughness.

Invitations were sent to all New York newspaper critics, who responded en masse Sunday, the day "The Light in the Dark" opened.

A certain bogus Prince was exposed by the Daily News, and Benedict R. Sobler, publicity director of the theatre, learning that Hope Hampton was one of several screen celebrities who were pursued by him, brought reporters from all over the city to interview Miss Hampton on her experiences with the imposter. This resulted in columns of valuable space.

The second stunt was a Red Head matinee. Letters were sent to the principals of all Brooklyn High Schools teaching girls, cordially inviting all "red heads" therein to attend the Wednesday matinee of "The Light in the Dark" gratis.

Because of the color reel in "The Light in the Dark," the editors of the Brooklyn art gravures were invited to attend the picture's exhibition, and pictures in the art gravures resulted.

Miss Hampton's performance at her personal appearances embodied the rendition of some vocal numbers. The Duo-Art reproducing piano was pressed into service, and used by Miss Hampton instead of an accompanist. This tie-up manifested itself in the Aeolian Company's newspaper advertising.

Trolley Company Gives Gratis Space to "Human Hearts"

East St. Louis, Ill.—Recently John Choate, advertising director for the Majestic theatre, worked a Human Hearts contest in conjunction with the Daily Journal, leading daily newspaper, to exploit the showing of "Human Hearts" at his theatre.

The stunt was given wide publicity and thousands sent letters to the Journal in an endeavor to win some of the prizes awarded. But Choate received some very valuable publicity that he had not figured on in any of his calculations.

W. H. Sawyer, president of the East St. Louis & Suburban Railway System, including the East St. Louis Railway Company and eight other subsidiaries, watched the Human Hearts contest grow and finally concluded it would be a good thing for him to tie-up with, so he inserted advertisements in the Daily Journal calling attention to the human hearts of the motormen and conductors employed by the car company.

His ad copy called specific attention to the Human Hearts contest conducted by Choate.

In writing to the editor of the Daily Journal Sawyer said: "I guess I am advertising their picture, but in tying up my advertising with that of the picture I am getting the effect of all the costly publicity of the company, and so I find it a fifty-fifty proposition after all."

Tie-ups With Banks Put Over on "Your Best Friend"

SPOKANE, Wash.—A number of tie-ups with local banks were obtained by the Auditorium theatre on "Your Best Friend."

Manager Charles W. York announced to the public through the medium of the Spokane Chronicle that every child born during the exhibition of the picture would be started with a savings account at a local trust company. According to Mr. York considerable interest resulted.

"Remembrance" Tied Up with National Apple Week

BALTIMORE, Md.—National Apple Week was used to advantage by the Century theatre, one of the Whitehurst chain here, in exploitation of "Remembrance." One thousand apples were given away at the door through an arrangement with the local committee in charge of Apple Week.

Publicity was obtained through advertising, and the local papers ran stories in which the stunt was given space, the stories carrying the statement that the apples were given away "in remembrance," which linked up the picture nicely.

Storm Experiences Contest Is Used on "The Storm"

HOUSTON, Texas—Manager Charles McFarland, of the Queen theatre, in conjunction with Universal exploitation representative Wakefield, exploited "The Storm" to good advantage.

Beginning one week in advance a story writing contest on "Storm" experiences started the campaign through the newspapers. Fifty dollars in prizes were given away for the best stories on "Storms" that had visited Houston.

Teaser ads were scattered through the newspapers, also the weather column in the newspapers carried a similar announcement.

Scratch Pad Exploitation Is Good Will Booster

Sandusky, Ohio.—George Schade, proprietor of the Schade theatre, has put into effect an exploitation stunt which goes into the homes and which should be a profitable good will booster. He has done this by the simple expedient of making up scratch pads, or tablets, that are used in every classroom in the country and then taken home for "home work."

Schade's tablets have been made up in regulation size in vast quantities, bearing advertising for the "Schade Theatre, Always a Good Show, the Home of First National Attractions" at the top. They were produced at a price that still gave the retailer a substantial profit. The fact that the cover front carried a photograph of the Schade theatre and that the pad was called "The Schade Theatre Tablet" was simply good civic boosting and helped, rather than hurt, their sale in Sandusky.

For exploitation results alone the idea would be worth a good investment. Combined with the fact that it is actually going to enable the exhibitor to break even, it furnishes a remarkable example of simple but effective exploitation. Five thousand tablets constitute the first order.

This lavish prologue, with a setting done in old rose, pale green and gold, was presented by Manager Paul E. Noble of the Liberty theatre, Portland, on "Broadway Rose"

Appropriate street ballyhoo on "East is West" prepared by Manager Richard Doering of the Arcade theatre, Paducah, Ky.

Pupils Excused from School to See "Sherlock Holmes"

Lynchburg, Va.—Manager Accrossinni of the Academy theatre obtained valuable publicity for "Sherlock Holmes" through a tie-up with the school board.

He arranged with the school board to give a special showing at ten o'clock Tuesday morning for every school child that wished to see it. The children were to be excused from school long enough to see the photoplay screened. The children were to pay the regular price for children's tickets to the Academy, 25 cents. Of this amount, 10 cents was to go to the theatre and 15 cents to the School Entertainment Fund. The pupils bought the tickets from their teachers, the latter retaining the school's share of 15 cents for each ticket.

A letter was sent to all students of the Randolf Macon College and the Sweet Briar School for Girls—a thousand young people being reached by this scheme. The police of Lynchburg attended in a body the Monday afternoon showing as guests of the theatre.

"East Is West" Map Is New Treasure Hunt Angle

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—A treasure hunt with a unique angle was sponsored by the Indianapolis Times as an exploitation hook-up on "East is West" at the Circle theatre.

The hunt was tied up with the picture through passes and advertising, but to make the connection even more distinct a novel feature was introduced in the directions that were given for the location of the treasure.

The four corners of the globe were simply turned around with the result that this admonition was given: "Remember that north is south, south is north, west is east and EAST IS WEST."

The twist was an adroit method of bringing in the title of the picture but even more effective in arousing interest in the hunt by this angle.

Cowboy Club Tie-Up Is Booster For "Cowboy and the Lady"

AUSTIN, TEXAS.—A tie-up with a local club at Texas University on "The Cowboy and the Lady" recently brought Manager R. P. Whitfield, of the Majestic theatre, good results in the way of publicity.

This club is known as "The Cowboys" and its official uniform is the regular cowboy's outfit, which includes the large sombreros, red shirts, bandanna handkerchiefs and leather breeches covered with white animal hair. This club is considered the most popular in the school. So this tie-up with them and the theatre was splendid publicity.

Mr. Whitfield gave this organization a theatre party. In return for this courtesy "The Cowboys" marched to the theatre in a body, each accompanied by his lady friend. Large banners, on which were painted the title of the picture, also the title of this organization, were carried by "The Cowboys" in their parade to the theatre.

Mr. Whitfield says that the newspapers gave it front page publicity.

Dealers Aid "Laugh Week" for "Grandma's Boy" Showing

Houston, Texas.—Manager C. A. McFarland of the Queen theatre put over a comprehensive campaign on "Grandma's Boy," starting with heavy use of accessory paper around town.

The local officials were very co-operative in helping the local management to put over a "National Laugh Week" in Houston. Special cards were printed about "Laugh Week" which were distributed in the stores and hotels around the city. Newspapers helped to further this campaign with special stories. Also several merchants, realizing what it meant to have every one "smiling" during that week, headed their ads in the newspaper with the slogan, "It's National Laugh Week."

Three matinees were held for children during the week. The most successful was the matinee held on the day the Ringling Brothers' circus was in town, since a holiday was given to all school children. Mr. McFarland advertised in the newspapers and on cards the special matinee that would be held in the morning just before the circus parade.

The Imperial theatre, San Francisco, obtained this display through a tie-up with a savings bank on "The Old Homestead"

Perfect Lips Contest Exploits "Trifling Women"

Cleveland, Ohio.—A contest to find the young woman in Cleveland with the most perfect lips was used as an exploitation tie-up on "Trifling Women" for its showing at the Stillman theatre.

The contest for the young woman who could answer the requirement was a keen one, and the Cleveland Press carried photographs of those competing, as well as of Barbara La Marr, whose lips were used as a model of perfection.

The contest was arranged as follows: The Press announced that Rex Ingram, director of the photoplay, was desirous of finding an understudy to Miss La Marr, and had asked the paper to help find one. The chief requirement was that the young woman have as perfect lips as those possessed by the screen actress. The account continued to the effect that Mr. Ingram would award a prize of $50 to the lucky woman having the necessary requirements. Photographs were to be sent to the newspapers and a committee of Cleveland judges was to make the decision.

Groups of contestants were published daily, all calling attention to the contest as well as to the picture at the Stillman theatre.

Richard A. Addison, publicity director of the Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Cal., arranged this attractive "Love's Redemption" display

Chinese Bridal Gown Displayed for "East Is West"

BALTIMORE, Md.—Manager Guy Wonders of the Rivoli theatre, through the courtesy of a Chinese graduate of Johns Hopkins Medical college, obtained a genuine Chinese bridal costume, which was exhibited in the window of a leading department store, in connection with the showing of "East Is West." Three of the original sketches for Constance Talmadge were also shown.

The prologue used consisted of two singers in Chinese costume rendering the "Chinese Lullaby," against a background of silk curtains and Chinese lanterns.

Box-Office Made Arab Tent For "Burning Sands" Lobby

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—Manager S. S. Wallace, Jr., of the Capitol theatre, arranged a lobby display on "Burning Sands" that was simple yet most effective, consisting of three cut-outs, two of the cut-outs representing Arab soldiers standing on guard on each side of the lobby. Between these two Arabs in the centre of the lobby just in front of the box office was a cut-out of Milton Sills holding Jacqueline Logan in his arms.

The box office was covered to represent an Arab tent with an opening in the front for the cashier, this opening being in the shape of a pyramid. Yellow and red stripes were the colors used for the tent material and the title of the picture hung above the box office, being painted in corresponding colors.

Vigorous Campaign Put Back of "Quincy Adams Sawyer"

Baltimore, Md.—When the New theatre staged the premiere of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" here, L. A. DeHoff, of the Whitehurst interests, and Leon Victor, Metro's publicity and exploitation man, put over some vigorous campaigning. One of the stunts was the serving of summonses upon prominent attorneys of the city, requiring that they appear "before Quincy Adams Sawyer at the New theatre."

Mayor Broening, Governor Ritchie and other officials, who also are attorneys, were among those upon whom the papers were served, and whenever possible Mr. DeHoff and Mr. Victor enlisted the services of an "honest-to-goodness" policeman to pass the papers. Good results were obtained from the stunt, and many of the "summoned" men were observed in the audiences.

A street ballyhoo also was used for the production, a small cabin mounted on a float being drawn about the downtown thoroughfares. This float bore appropriate advertising and was decorated with pumpkins, corn shocks and other typically Yankee and typically autumn trappings. The New's box office was buried in laurel, corn shocks and artificial chrysanthemums, and in the foyer stood an old-fashioned kitchen range, which gave all the appearances of having a good fire inside.

FOR five dazzling years Pearl White made Patheserial history.

She made her fame and achieved her popularity as a Patheserial star. The public wants her as such a star. Now, after an extended stay abroad, she returns to star in her greatest Patheserial.

Hundreds of exhibitors got their start on the road to independence by playing her in Patheserials. They still talk of the amazing profits they made.

The same brilliant and unapproachable combination of star, authors and director that created the never-to-be-forgotten "House of Hate" has made in "Plunder" a serial better than any of the past, for it is thoroughly modern, thoroughly censor-proof.

The unbeatable combination, then, has made the unbeatable Patheserial.

How "The Dangerous Age" Swept Paterson

Here—for the First Time in a Trade Paper— Is Given the A. B. C. of a Local Campaign

By ROGER FERRI

FIRST NATIONAL has communicated to every exhibitor in this country the information that its 1922-23 lineup of productions are the box office variety. And it intends substantiating and proving that statement beyond any shadow of doubt by telling the whole universe that it has entertaining features. And neither time, money nor effort is being stinted in merely telling this hard-boiled universe, but it is also aiming to bring everybody in it to the box office.

Which leads this writer to the task of completing the most pleasant assignment we have had in a long, long time, namely, that of trailing the Paterson, N. J., exploitation campaign of "The Dangerous Age."

Lining up the best possible products and telling exhibitors about it was only thirty-three and one-third per cent. of First National's program. The second third of the campaign was the alliance with Louis Mayer, who assigned Harry Reichenbach to spare nothing in giving theatre owners every co-operation possible. The remaining third constituted the successful consummation of the superlatively original exploitation of this money-making showman and tieing it up in such a fashion that sight of the exploited product would escape neither man, woman nor child and incidentally prove its mettle in good old dollars and cents at the telltale box office.

Unannounced he and his Assistant, Perry Charles, invaded this home of the silk industry and overnight securely took possession of it—City Hall, Mayor, citizens and newspapers.

There was not a single man, woman or child who did not know that Monday, Nov. 21, marked the world premier showing of Louis Mayer's latest John M. Stahl production, "The Dangerous Age," starring Lewis Stone. Every police officer in Paterson and in every city or town within a radius of 20 miles, for that matter, wondered what "The Dangerous Age" was. And they came on Monday, Nov. 21—a date Paterson will not easily forget—and saw and laughed and sighed and cried and then emerged from Fabian Brothers' Garden Theatre satisfied that they had received their money's worth, pleased because things had not been misrepresented, entertained because it was a wonderfully entertaining picture they saw, enthused because pictures had been "sold" to them in a new, up-to-date, dignified, intelligent style, rejoicing because they had solved a mystery that for fully ten days had been the popular topic of conversation on the streets, in the stores, in the offices, restaurants, cars, hotels and home, and smiling because they had lost no time seeing the thing that they so strongly wanted to see, for advance reports were so alluring, so captivatingly human, for the bid for patronage had been made so teasingly that keeping away from the playhouse was impossible.

Explanatory

EXHIBITORS, producers and distributors are familiar with the exploitation campaigns which Harry B. Reichenbach has put over in the past and will always be found interested in anything which he promotes.

On this and the following nine pages, is stated a full and complete recital of the exploitation which Mr. Reichenbach planned for Louis B. Mayer's big new special production, "The Dangerous Age," during its recent premier showing at Fabian Brothers' Garden theatre, Paterson, N. J.

This story relates, step by step, what was done in advance of the opening date and follows the campaign through to its most successful termination.

The campaign represents not the theories of some one writing from a desk in New York, but the actual ideas and stunts that were used in putting the picture over.

It seemed as though a magnet attracted the whole of Paterson. Instead of the quiet, unassuming, conservative municipality it had been, Paterson, out of a clear sky and all of a sudden, arose, as if in unison, and bombarded the strongly guarded doors of the Garden, pressing to get in. But not even that manly Police Department of Paterson was powerful enough to conquer the populace that had been so rousingly awakened by an exploitation campaign that reached everywhere—in the offices and schools, in the shops and homes, in the churches, and, in fact, every place.

Paterson—and for this we have the word of Mayor Van Noort, who was born in that city and has lived there all his life—never greeted anybody or anything so royally as it awaited, impatiently, the advent of "The Dangerous Age."

The response to the exploitation was so great that even the smiling pilot of the house, Cameron Dooley, had to admit it was "the greatest sight I have ever seen." It was so great that the overflow from the Garden Theatre furnished capacity houses for opposition movie pavilions, for thousands were turned away.

And they didn't stop coming after the opening show, either, for the attendance on Tuesday was also great with every indication that the week would be the biggest any Paterson house has known.

The campaign did something more than permanently establish First National in Paterson; it did something more than bring an entire city to a box office; it went beyond accomplishing these tasks, for it injected life when life there seemingly was not and in the words, again, of Mayor Van Noort, it "convinced us Patersonians what great things we can do and how wonderful our city is."

An Horatio Alger could have received ample inspiration for material with which to write a story entitled "From Showman to Owner of a City" in what Mr. Reichenbach accomplished in Paterson. And he did own the city in every sense of the word, for there seemingly wasn't a single thing there that he wanted that he did not get. He conquered newspapers by intelligent tieups. Nowhere in Paterson was there a more enthusiastic booster of "The Dangerous Age" than Hissoner Van Noort. He won over the Chamber of Commerce to the man by enlisting the co-operation of every business executive there.

"The Dangerous Age" was everywhere. You just couldn't escape it.

Everywhere people for ten days before the world premiere showing, which was itself an event in that Director John M. Stahl, Cleo Madison, Edith Roberts and others representative of Louis Mayer and First National were on hand, Patersonians and their neighbors residing within a radius of 20 miles were asking:

"What is 'The Dangerous Age'?"

Newspaper editors editorialized on "The Dangerous Age."

Preachers discussed it from the pulpits.

Screaming, screeching illuminated billboards at the helm of every road leading into Paterson blazed the trail and directed the attention of motorists, pedestrians and who not to the fact that "The Dangerous Age" was here—and later supplemented this announcement with the information that it was playing at the Garden Theatre.

For ten days every Paterson newspaper, every newspaper in six towns, carried prominently displayed stories on their front pages, all dealing with "The Dangerous Age."

As one boarded cars there were artistically laid out cards announcing "The Dangerous Age." Twenty thousand heralds reached 20,000 hands and told of the advent of "The Dangerous Age." Five thousand one-sheets covered the territory as it had never been covered before. Twenty-four-sheets with attractive pictorial reading matter blazed in ideal locations on every road of any consequence and on roof tops. Hundreds of six-sheets and three-sheets were posted where they would escape the eye of no one. Attractive booklets were circulated by the thousand about the city, among men, women and children. Highbrows, lowbrows and highlowbrows all knew in plenty quick time that "The Dangerous Age" was coming.

Paterson has two morning newspapers—Morning Call and Times—and two evening papers—Evening News and Press-Guardian. There is one Sunday paper—the Chronicle. The combined circulation of these newspapers reaches virtually every English-reading and speaking home in Paterson. But "The Dangerous Age" didn't stop there; it enlisted the co-operation of every newspaper in the territory and among them were the Hackensack Record, Suffolk Independent, Hawthorne News, Clifton Times and others.

Space consumed in local newspapers for layouts follows:

FIRST NATIONAL SCORES

As a consequence of the remarkable campaign conducted on Louis B. Mayer's John M. Stahl production, "The Dangerous Age," there is apparently not a man, woman or child in Paterson, N. J., and vicinity that is not now acquainted with the trade mark, "First National." While the campaign effectively brought seemingly endless lines of humanity to the box office of the Garden Theatre, it established a good will for First National attractions that is unpurchasable. Every business man and city official was made intimately acquainted with the policy of First National.

own mediums and by heralds, throwaways and cards written in their native tongue. Nothing or nobody was overlooked. The factories were carefully covered so that every workman and workwoman in the county knew that it was a question of just so many days when "The Dangerous Age" would overpower the city.

The cost of this marvelous campaign—the greatest ever conducted in that every newspaper in Paterson, conservative and liberal alike, and in adjacent cities and towns were completely tied up with it in one way or another—was astonishingly small, for no unusual amount of advertising was carried. But what made this campaign even more remarkable than the low cost was the fact that for ten days in all the aforementioned papers front-page stories that ran over into the inside newsy sections were carried with the title "The Dangerous Age" prominently played up in the headlines.

The campaign out-circused the circus without the typical circus ballyhoo. As an intelligent, sure-fire, effective campaign, dignified and concentrated on mediums that embraced the entire population. And without the services of the army of publicists, ballyhooers and billposters that circuses carry—receiving 21 times more space than all the circuses and carnivals that played Paterson this year, and this at less than one-tenth what it cost those wealthy combinations.

Following is the amount of space it obtained in the five newspapers, the inch space below recorded being that developed to strictly news stories involving contests, "news breaks," features and do not include the regular notices nor cuts used by the sheets, from Saturday, Nov. 11, to Monday, Nov. 20, when "The Dangerous Age" opened:

| | Sunday Chronicle | Press-Guardian | Times | Call | News | Day's Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Sat., Nov. 11.. | .... | .... | 7 | .... | .... | 7 |
| Sun., Nov. 12.. | 8 | .... | .... | .... | .... | 8 |

| Total ..... | 20½ | 88¼ | 117½ | 65½ | 79 | 370¾ |

Instead of one front page story that usually greets a circus in town, the picture received thirty-five in eight papers in ten days, which is considerable of a record.

Thus it is shown, in cold figures, that for every line of advertising received brought four in return.

Of the total 370¾ inches of space in the news columns were about 210 inches on the front pages. And most of these front page yarns, which averaged three papers a day, were continued to the inside pages.

In addition to this news space two of the newspapers editorialized at considerable length on "The Dangerous Age."

Inasmuch as 60 per cent. of the campaign was confined strictly to newspapers with all the editors wholeheartedly co-operating it is only right that we take this phase of the movement first and in detail, paper by paper. Then we will dwell on the billboard and miscellaneous campaign that reached out to everybody and covered everything. No street ballyhoo of any kind, however, was used.

Something New in a "Catch the Letter" Race

Carte blanche was given by Louis Mayer, whose only instructions were to make the whole world know his latest John M. Stahl picture was a winner. Before we go a step farther let us record right here that what we believe to be a record in ticket selling was registered when the two girls at the Garden box office at the Monday night supper show sold 379 tickets between 6 and 6.15 o'clock, an average of about 25 tickets a minute—with a line three blocks long waiting to get in.

Now to get back to the inauguration of the newspaper campaign and following it through until the very last show on the Monday opening.

Then came the visit to the newspaper offices. Interviews with the editors "sold" them 100 per cent., as we will prove to the reader by pointing out the extent of their marvelous cooperation. Then the word was given out: "Let 'er go." And from that time on "she" went a pace the dust of which will never blow away from the now thoroughly awakened city of Paterson.

With the Mayor and editors lined up, the campaign started in earnest on Saturday morning, Nov. 11, when the Paterson Morning Times broke with a two-column seven-inch story on the second page. The story introduced the first newspaper tieup with "The Dangerous Age." The heading and story follow:

Want Ideas from Wives on Picture

What is "The Dangerous Age?"

Is it when a man reaches his voting age or when he is about forty?

For the next two weeks Paterson is to hear and see a great deal of this "Dangerous Age."

Are the wives of the men of Paterson aware that perhaps their husbands have reached this age?

It has to come and how to overcome it is the problem.

The Morning Times is aware of the significance and importance of this stage in the average husband's career and has taken upon itself to ascertain by a contest just what the married women of Paterson really believe it the best way to overcome "The Dangerous Age."

A committee has been appointed consisting of His Honor, the Mayor, as chairman, the editor of The Times, and Charles Dooley, and a prize of $50 offered, to be divided $25 as first prize, $15 as second prize and $10 as third prize, for the three best letters submitted to The Times' office before Nov. 20 on this question that has taken the country by storm.

Lewis Stone was of the average type of married man, with a devoted wife, blind to his "Dangerous Age," insisting that he have his soft-boiled eggs for breakfast, instead of hard, that he dress with the seasons, advancing in the spring morning with a tablespoonfull of sulphur and molasses instead of on the wings of romance, a steady diet of minor irritations and insignificant happenings that rubbed the wrong way.

Whose fault is that? Is a man the child of destiny as he so often fondly believes? And at what age is it that it becomes truly dangerous? Is he at the top of his fame at forty?

What think you, married women of Paterson?

Want to Make Fifty Dollars?

Lewis Stone has reached "The Dangerous Age" of life. Sickened with the motherly care of his devoted wife, the business call from his California home to the hustle and bustle of New York was welcomed as a relief of the steadfast daily routine of life.

It was a simple enough matter to mail the letter back home saying he was through, that the girl of his dreams had infatuated him even though she was a chance acquaintance, he knew that his future happiness lay before him.

Yet a brief half hour after, he would have given his very soul to retrieve it.

"Why, you are old enough to be my father," she had laughingly called after him as he stumbled, half blind with mortification and humiliation from the parlor of her home, as she snuggled closer to her lover.

Thousands of times have we seen letters dropped into the box without a thought of the strings of destiny that may be pulled and knotted by the contents.

How many of us have regretted the hastily scribbled notes written on the spur of the moment?

And what we wouldn't have given to recall it?

In "The Dangerous Age" there begins a continental chase that finally ends in California.

On Monday, November 20, will begin a chase that although not as country-wide as Stone's, yet of intense interest to Patersonians for The Press-Guardian has offered a cash prize of fifty dollars to any citizen of Paterson that intercepts one of twelve letters that will be mailed by Mayor Van Noort the Sunday before, and reaches The Press-Guardian offices first. A list of the twelve prominent New Yorkers who will receive the letters will be published in the previous Sunday Chronicle.

Was Stone successful? Will you be?

The next day—Sunday—the Sunday Chronicle broke with a double column boxed story, shown above.

That day the first three-inch, one column, teaser ad was inserted in The Sunday Chronicle. The text follows: "Ask Any Married Woman What Is THE DANGEROUS AGE, Then Ask Her Husband."

Monday afternoon, Nov. 13 The Press-Guardian ran an 11-inch story on its first page with a continuation on page two. The story was headed in 24 pt. Condensed Hancock with a three-line 14 point pyramid step-head. In this story, the contest announced the preceding day in The Sunday Chronicle, which is published also by the Press-Guardian firm, was again explained in detail. However, this story disclosed the local engagement of "The Dangerous Age," which by this time had taken the town really by storm, for the publicity given by the newspapers, together with the circusing of the city and countryside with banners, paper, heralds and what not had started the ball swiftly rolling, so rapidly in fact that the famous Hall-Mills' dual murder case of New Brunswick, N. J.; the movements of Clemenceau, the opening of the special session of Congress and the German cabinet reorganization news issues became of secondary importance insofar as Patersonians were concerned. The exploitation was that effective journalistically.

The Press-Guardian front page story wound up as follows:

"It is simply a matter of endurance, rush, speed and matter of approach. All you need to do is approach some of the persons to whom the letter is mailed, ask for it in the name of The Press-Guardian and return it as stipulated above—and earn ten nice shining gold pieces.

"If two persons should return the letters at the identical time, which is almost improbable, this fifty dollars will be divided equally between the presenters. Full details of the enterprise will be published each day in The Press-Guardian and next Sunday in The Chronicle.

"Watch each day for new angles and details."

That same day three one-inch, one-column ads appeared in teaser form in The Times, Call, Press-Guardian and Evening News. These read as follows:

(1) Young Married Women Ignorant of THE DANGEROUS AGE in a Man's Life Can Ask Their Mothers or Watch Fathers."

(2) There Would Be No Need for a Divorce Court If Every Woman Knew When Her Husband Reached THE DANGEROUS AGE.

(3) Even a Greasy Old Gypsy Woman Is Competition When He Is at THE DANGEROUS AGE. You Must Watch Him Every Moment.

Tuesday The Morning Times continued its "Wives' Letter Contest" boosting the tieup with a two-column front page yarn eight inches in length. And conspicuous mention was made of the coming of the picture.

The other papers were giving equally effective space, for all were in one way or another hooked up day in and day out and for the full nine-days' advance work "The Dangerous Age" became a front page subject.

The teasers, too, were going over effectively and on that Tuesday the following ads were run:

(1) When He Grumbles and Starts Making Excuses to Get Out Nights He Has Reached THE DANGEROUS AGE.

(2) If Your Husband Has Reached THE DANGEROUS AGE Watch Him Like You Would a Child. It Begins at 40 and Ends at 100.

Editorially The Paterson Call that day ran the following featured story.

"Some times in the most outwardly happy married couple's life there is thrown the bombshell of divorce.

"That in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred could have been prevented were the wife aware of the dangerous age is seemingly a fact.

"Man may call himself the child of destiny, the plaything of fate or the apex of the eternal triangle, a vain seeker after harmony, romance and love, but it is the home ties that unweaving and unbinding themselves, play havoc with the bliss of a happily married woman.

"She becomes a mother to him rather than the girlhood wife of his dreams. The romantic cloak in which she appealed to him is left to fall when the duties of home and children begin to manifest themselves. She works herself to the very bone to satisfy his every whim and thought and yet when 'The Dangerous Age' comes he forgets.

"A pretty face and again a flirtation with his buried romance begins. It has to come to every man sometime in his life. Not that he welcomes it, for facing the situation in cold blood he realizes the foolishness of it all, but when he does, he lightly throws off all thoughts of care and years of his wife's self-sacrifices and madly plunges.

"What is 'The Dangerous Age?'"

The Evening News fell in line the following day with a one-column seven-inch story on the front page as follows:

$4 For Single Copy of News $2 for 23 Others

YOU MAY BE ONE OF THE LUCKY ONES-READ THIS STORY CAREFULLY—IT HAS TO DO WITH THE DANGEROUS AGE

"It has often been said, and truly so, that a newspaper is the greatest value offered to the public today. It costs more to manufacture a newspaper and the finished product is sold for less than any other known commodity.

"Through the co-operation of Louis B. Mayer, of the Louis B. Mayer Enterprises, producers of the famous film, "The Dangerous Age," which will be shown all next week at the Garden Theatre, 24 copies of next Saturday's edition of The News will be worth $4 and $2 each.

"It's all very simple and there are no strings attached to the offer. Next Saturday evening The News will publish twenty-four names of men and women selected at random from the city directory. The first name published will entitle its owner to $4 in cash. Each of the other twenty-three names will get $2 in cash.

"Watch The News on Saturday. If your name appears save the paper and at two o'clock Monday afternoon present your copy of The News at the box office of the Garden Theatre and cash it in. You will be paid without fail; all you have to do is to sign a receipt for the money paid you.

"This is a progressive age and 'The Dangerous Age' will mean money in your pocket. It pays to be a reader of The News."

With the contests all underway, the newspaper editorial staffs co-operated to the limit and each day the stories hooking up with "The Dangerous Age" and the Garden engagement were printed in conspicuous places, mostly the first or second news pages. The Wednesday teaser ad was a three by two columns and read as follows:

"You May Realize You Are Married to Him, but Does He? He Begins Forgetting When He Has Reached THE DANGEROUS AGE."

After Wednesday the local reportorial staffs seemed to fairly vie with one another, for the space increased. The rhetorical genius of the staffs were put on the jobs. Paterson was treated to a new novelty, that of a group of reporters working industriously trying to get over the best story. The picture was the winner.

The newspapers were deluged with queries from readers and soon the campaign spread so much so that instead of the usual one story, several of the papers stepped outside the bounds and devoted two stories, at times, to the issue, which was discussed in the form of letters to the editors.

But while the contests were taking care of themselves and arousing public curiosity as it had never before been aroused in Paterson, use was made of the "want ad" columns of the various newspapers, all the ads hooking up with the text in clever fashion, and resulting in wholesale responses by thousands of persons. These were all told to call at a certain newspaper and at the same time acquainted them with the fact that "The Dangerous Age" would be at the Garden Theatre.

Friday, The Morning Times began publishing letters from readers. Hundreds of letters were received from married women. The discussions among married women became so pronounced and heated that "The Dangerous Age" became discussed in every women's club. One woman, Mrs. Emma O'Connell, of 27 Hamburg street, Paterson, N. J., said there was "no such thing as the dangerous age in any man's life," but Mrs. A. W. disagreed with her, saying that her husband's "Dangerous Age" came "about a year after we were married and if I had not been on the job every minute of the time I would have been sunk. 'The Dangerous Age' is any time your husband gets mooning around the house, sitting up with sick friends or horses every other night and galavanting about town like a colt when he ought to be home in bed. It's up to the wife to see that she is a pal instead of a sparring partner." Another woman, Mrs. R. H., contended that "The first five years of a married man's life constitutes 'The Dangerous Age.' If you can get over that space, you need not worry over anything else."

Saturday came the big play in all newspaper advertising and stories, all the sheets breaking all previous records for free news space given the picture. The Morning Times devcted almost one and a half columns to letters received from readers who discussed "The Dangerous Age." The letters were interesting and varied. The News, Press-Guardian and Call all gave equally prominent and liberal space to news stories. And mind you, all the while, the regular show notices were being published in the theatre columns of the various papers.

The Press-Guardian contest, coming to a climax on Saturday, published the following:

Race After Letters Starts Tomorrow

Mayor Van Noort Will Mail Them and First to Return One Gets $50

"Tomorrow is the day. Tomorrow twelve specially printed letters with glaring words on the envelope will be mailed by Mayor Van Noort, of Paterson, at the mail box on Market and Washington streets, to the following persons in New York:—

"Nat Lewis, Paul Mooney, Adele, Best & Ormonde, Crane Simplex Company, Kraus Manufacturing Company, J. Robert Rubin, Finchley, Heeps, Inc., Slendaform Corporation, Capehart, Cary Company and Murphy & Brody.

"The addresses of these individuals will be published in tomorrow's Sunday Chronicle. The first person who reaches New York, approaches any of the firms or persons mentioned above, secures one of the letters, unopened, and returns it to the business office of The Press-Guardian, will be presented with $50.

"The receivers of the letters have been requested not to open the letters until after 12 o'clock Monday, so that one must work fairly rapid in order to secure the letter unopened.

"The mailing of the letters will occur at nine o'clock Sunday night. Mayor Van Noort will drop the twelve letters into the mail box, after which it is entirely up to you If you arrive in New York too late to retrieve one of the letters unopened you will not receive any reward.

"This unusual enterprise was prompted by the unique situation in John M. Stahl's motion picture drama, 'The Dangerous Age,' which opens at the Garden Theatre, Monday, etc., etc., dealing with the story of the picture, the entire yarn taking up a full newspaper column."

The Sunday Chronicle conspicuously ran a front page story on the "go-get-the-letter contest," adding the New

Showmen in Paterson never take the supper show seriously and an attendance of between 100 and 200 is considered rather high, for Patersonians are busily consuming their supper in that period. But seemingly a hungry stomach was ignored Monday night, for the supper show was as jammed as the last night performance of "The Dangerous Age."

The supper show Monday set a new record, for by 6.30 o'clock there was a line two blocks long, double file, waiting to get in. Eight policemen were rushed to the scene by Police Headquarters to handle the impatient, but enthusiastic crowd.

York addresses of the receivers of the letters.

Monday — opening day — brought all contests to a head. The News proudly devoted almost a column to announcing the 24 winners of its unique name contest. The Morning Times devoted considerable space, more than it devoted to internationally important news dispatches, completing its "letter writing contest involving the married women of Paterson." The Press-Guardian played up the winner of the "go-get-the-letter contest," which was won by W. Barlow, of 188 Genesee street, Paterson. The prize was $50.

The editors of The Press-Guardian, according to reporters' statements, were kept busy answering telephones from interested readers seeking to know who "won the contest." In the Monday afternoon edition of that paper appeared the following front page story:

test staged in connection with the showing of 'The Dangerous Age' at the Garden Theatre this week. He reached The Press-Guardian office at one minute past twelve o'clock today. He was the first person to return one of the six special delivery letters mailed by Mayor Van Noort last night.

"Macy Esterman, of 149 Broadway, came in second, arriving at the Press-Guardian office at 12.20 o'clock.

"Mr. Barlow, when informed he had won, immediately asked permission to phone his mother of his good luck. He then told how he left the office of the Crane Simplex Company, 200 West 59th street, exactly at 10.55 o'clock, when the letter arrived.

"Nick Harvey, well-known local sportsman, was waiting with his car. They dashed to the Weehawken ferry and just caught the boat. From Weehawken to Hackensack they made good time. Just this side of Hackensack they struck a bump and broke the rear end. Leaving Harvey, Barlow jumped on a bus for Passaic. There he just caught the 11.41 Erie train for Paterson. He ran from the Market street station to the Press-Guardian office, arriving there at 12.01 and winning the $50 prize for the first letter to be returned to this office.

"Mr. Barlow will be presented with the five ten dollar gold pieces at the Garden Theatre tonight.

"C. M. Donohue, of 120 Twelfth avenue, reported to the Press-Guardian at 12.51 o'clock with the third letter."

Monday's ad in all newspapers was a four-inch by three-columns one-size typed ad in 24-point bold face Gothic, reading:

"TODAY AND ALL THIS WEEK AT THE GARDEN THEATRE, LOUIS B. MAYER WILL OFFER JOHN M. STAHL'S DRAMATIC CAMEO OF MATRIMONIAL MATES AND MISMATES, "THE DANGEROUS AGE." IT IS WORTH THE WHILE OF EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD IN PATERSON TO ATTEND. IT ACHIEVES A POINT SELDOM REACHED ON THE SCREEN."

So much for the record-breaking publicity campaign reaching out to every newspaper. The rural papers were not forgotten and equally effective tieups were arranged with them.

Following the conferences with Mayor Van Noort, city officials and representative business men, Mr. Reichenbach, with the newspapers well underway with their campaign and the reportorial staffs working overtime, devoted his attention, temporarily, to the billboard question. For this purpose De Angeles' circus crew of bill posters were brought into action and they "sniped" everything within a radius of 23 miles. Nothing was overlooked. Spots that had never been plastered were adorned with cards, or paper, whichever was more appropriate.

Every road leading into the city of Paterson was covered. Not a single spot with any magnetic value was missed. Four thousand one sheets were plastered at locations where they attracted the eye. As one started on his way to Paterson from New York, either from the 33rd street Hudson tube station (uptown) or the Hudson Terminal (downtown) one's eye is arrested by a series of well-worded one-sheets. The same sight greeted one as he walked leisurely along in the tunnel leading from the Hudson tube stop at Erie Station in Jersey City to the Erie Station platform.

And as the train chugged its way from Hackensack twenty-four and six-sheets held one's attention. Everything else seemed to have been forgotten, for not a single spot of any vantage value was ducked or muffed.

Going into Riverside and Clifton, N. J., each town about four miles from Paterson, boards, each 14x14, were erected at ideal locations cleverly advertising the engagement. No motorist could pass the spot without having his attention attracted to the brilliantly illuminated and attractive signs. For the first time, too, the Public Service property is Paterson were covered with neat book-layouts on "The Dangerous Age."

Local churches also were cleverly tied up with the production. The theme upon which the production is based was capitalized by clergymen using "The Dangerous Age" for the sermons with mention made by most of them that it was playing the Garden Theatre. School teachers at the public schools encouraged the children to write manuscripts on "The Dangerous Age" of children.

The latter made an eloquent address that completely won the organization, which co-operated in many ways. The organization includes all the prominent business men of the city. A similar invitation came from the Chamber of Commerce which lined up 100 per cent. with Mayor Van Noort in passing along word of the engagement of "The Dangerous Age."

All along the roads leading into Paterson were placed 24x8-inch black and yellow strips with the following text:

"Paterson just ahead: It is one of the world's greatest silk centres, a thriving community of homes and an industrial seat. Also—it is the first city in America to see THE DANGEROUS AGE for an entire week beginning Monday, Nov. 20, at the Garden Theatre."

Scores of novelties were distributed. Among the most helpful of these was a neat 3x2 booklet, cleverly laid out in fourteen pages. The text follows: "'The Dangerous Age' of man by a successful wife. (Page 1). After a man reaches The Dangerous Age 'Goo-goo' again becomes his chief figure of speech. Say it and watch him cuddle. After a man reaches The Dangerous Age he begins to love taffy. Say it now, Taffy is far better than 'epitaphy' later. Your husband is no banjo—don't pick on him. If he says he has been at the club, believe him. It won't add to your peace of mind to learn different. When a man reaches The Dangerous Age he begins to sharpen his skates and look for thin ice. No matter how slow at 39, at 40 he doesn't even stop at corners to toot his horn. When he attains The Dangerous Age of 40 he expects you to look 2, act 15 and talk 10. If he likes baby talk you must even cultivate a lisp to please him. Eating may build you up physically, but it will play the very deuce with your domestic happiness. After he reaches The Dangerous Age he notices even ounces."

Then comes a two-page spread as follows:

In which a man . . . demonstrates the dangers of life's highways after the daylight hours of his boyhood.

Continuing, the text follows:

"No woman ever won and kept a man with sulphur and molasses. Try salve and straight lines. When a man reaches 40 and is attracted by a girl, it's not her youth he is after—it's his own. That is the Dangerous Age. A man is easily a fool till forty. Then easy to fool. Watch him every instant and try to be his permanent bride. Remember when your mind is on moth balls and a spring house cleaning, his is on spring poems and romance. Don't grown indifferent. There are three school periods in a man's life, 9 to learn his alphabet, 19 to study his career, 39 to strengthen him for his 40th birthday. You must be his tutor at the latter age. The last page contains the picture title, producer and production names and the First National trade mark."

It was no wonder then, with this remarkable exploitation, overlooking as it did no medium, but embracing everybody who was anybody in Paterson, with every newspaper tied up, with every business man's organization boosting and clergy co-operatively effecting, that "The Dangerous Age"

THE ECHO AND EXHIBITORS

There was not a single exhibitor in northern New Jersey who did not know of the extensive campaign of First National and Louis B. Mayer on the John M. Stahl feature, "The Dangerous Age," at the Garden. Exhibitors in the smaller towns adjacent to Paterson could not help but feel the effect at the box office, for the campaign spread into their localities, with First National profiting exceedingly, for it brought the public of those places in intimate touch with its attractions. It is safe to say that First National attractions in Paterson, N. J., are considered as valuable by Patersonians as the bonds issued by the First National Bank of that city.

when it opened Monday at the Garden did a record business.

Paterson is distinctively an industrial city. Six o'clock there means supper, but it didn't on Monday night, for promptly at 6 o'clock the record breaking line of three blocks started to form. It was the supper show that was on and for the first time in the history of the house the supper show was taxed to its capacity with at least 100 more folk waiting outside. By 7 o'clock the line had doubled and Manager Dooley had to summon additional police officers.

By 7.30 the entire street was choked, literally, with waiting humanity. Several thousands were turned away when the last show was started, thus driving them to other houses. The Tuesday business, however, continued in top form. John M. Stahl personally attended the premier and was introduced as were also the Misses Edith Roberts and Cleo Madison, who appear in "The Dangerous Age."

"DANGEROUS AGE" GIVEN PREMIERE

Thousands Turncd Away From Garden Theatre Last Evening

Thousands of local theatre-goers attended the initial presentation of "The Dangerous Age," at the Garden Theatre yesterday afternoon and last evening. The film staged under the direction of John M. Stahl and featuring Edith Roberts and Cleo Madison, was released under the First National Exhibitors' circuit and after its presentation here will be shown in New York City.

Approximately 4,000 persons saw the performances yesterday afternoon and last night and it is estimated that nearly a like number were turned away. It became necessary early last evening for the management to appeal to police headquarters for aid in handling the crowd and Police Sergeant L. J. Dunn and a squad of men were sent to the theatre.

Included in the vast throng were prominent motion picture producers from New York City, all of whom desired to witness the mammoth motion-picture play, which until yesterday afternoon had been shown only in the production studios.

"The Dangerous Age" is one of those heart-gripping dramas of married life and shows the result of matrimonial mates and mis-mates in a most vivid manner. There is not a dull momen during the entire production and the audience is swayed with emotion throughout. There is a decidedly interesting moral story in the plot of the drama which should not fail to interest everyone.

The production will be shown at the popular Market street photoplay theatre during the current week and there is little doubt but that capacity audiences will witness every presentation. After finishing this week in this city the photoplay will be shown in New York City where thousands of theatre-goers are anxiously awaiting the initial performance.

"A Daughter of Luxury"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A LITTLE different treatment of the Cinderella pattern is exposed here and the results are so excellent that it will be accepted as something worth while. Leonard Merrick, the author, knows how to put over the intimate touch. And his stories breeze through with a whimsical flourish. It is a credit to the director that he has preserved the delicate charm and brought forth all the captivating humor which is interwoven into the action without making it appear that it is unnecessary to the plot. There is no striving to create sensational episodes for the sake of adding drama. You cannot call it exciting. It conquers for its charm and whimsicality—without once calling upon sticky sentiment as is customary with the Cinderella formula.

It is a luxurious setting which Paul Powell has provided the story, which reached the stage as "The Impostor" before it was picturized. We look upon a girl who is up against it—a girl of gentle breeding who shakes hands with poverty pending the settlement of her father's estate. She is ejected by her landlady for non-payment of rent. She wanders in front of a hotel, where a rich man makes her acquaintance. Now, any girl who is cold and hungry isn't going to worry about the moral issue. So she accompanies him to his room, where there is warmth and food. There is a neat flash of humor all through this action. When his relatives intrude he is forced to pass her off as his sister-in-law—a rich heiress. Which introduces a family of social climbers, who take her to their home for the purpose of marrying her off to their son. The youth is of different stuff than his parents. He is not a fortune hunter. So they fall in love with one another.

What follows presents a series of adventures in which the heroine unmasks the father of the boy as a fraud, who would burglarize his own home to collect the insurance. The real heiress turns up and complicates matters, but the Cinderella has the whip hand by this time. And father is forced to grant his consent. The estate is settled and she becomes a real heiress after all. Agnes Ayres presents her cameo beauty and wears some striking gowns in the bargain. A neat little picture.

The Story—Treats of a girl reared in luxury and suddenly left destitute. She accepts her trials with a keen sense of humor. Among her experiences the girl is forced to pose as a wealthy heiress and is involved in a burglar insurance fraud. Has romance eventually and all ends well.

Production Highlights—The comedy vein. The work of the players, all of whom are admirably suited for their parts. The production values. The dramatic climax.

Drawing Power—Best suited for high class houses. Second class downtown houses should appreciate it.

"One-Eighth Apache"

Arrow-S. R.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Stuart Gibson)

HERE is a story which jumps from the northwest plains, where Indians still circulate freely and the gentlemen all carry guns, to the bright lights of New York, and back again. During its course it unfolds some deep-eyed villainy, some "woman-stuff" which would be balm to the heart of the cynically inclined, and Roy Stewart in the nearest thing to evening dress in riding clothes ever seen upon the screen. "One-Eighth Apache" should be guaranteed to tickle the craw of the wild-and-woolly fanatic and the small boy—but somehow it doesn't seem quite the thing for the "spot" of a more sophisticated type of observer.

There is some fairly good acting, and some very fine scenery, and the direction seems to be capable. George M. McDaniel makes a most lovable villain as Tyler Burgess; he's an utter scamp in the film, but a look at him shows you that he ought to be doing pleasant "friends of the family" rather than scoundrels. Kathleen Kirkham, who is the leading woman for Mr. Stewart, is pictorial and a good actress, while Wilbur McGough's characterization of Charlie Longdeer is very good indeed.

The Cast

Charlie Longdeer.....Wilbur McGough
Tyler Burgess.....George M. McDaniel
Joseph Murdock.....Richard La Reno
Brant Murdock.....Roy Stewart
Mrs. Courney Biddle.....Eleanor Hancock
Norma Biddle.....Kathleen Kirkham

Photographed by Harry Gerstall.

The Story—Brant Murdock is engaged to Norma Biddle. She is visiting with her mother at his father's home in the northwest. Burgess learns that Brant's veins contain Indian blood, his mother having been a squaw. Burgess is in love with Norma, and after trying otherwise to stop the marriage, he tells her of his knowledge. In trying to prevent the revelation, Brant's father fights Burgess, and is killed. Norma turns from Brant, and he goes to war. She marries Burgess and moves to the west. Brant returns to his old home after the war and, meeting her, is horrified. Later he sees Burgess, learns that his father has been killed unfairly, and is seeking Burgess to kill him when Charlie Longdeer fires the needed shot first.

Classification—Rather unnatural melodrama of "the great open places."

Production Highlights—Fine "shots" in the woods country. The fight in which Murdock is killed. The struggle between Brant and Burgess in the saloon. The concluding sequence ob blizzard-scenes in which Burgess dies.

Exploitation Angles—Would you marry a man with Indian blood? There's a chance for that sort of campaign. The idea of two men's struggle for a woman's love can also be used.

Drawing Power—Neighborhood and small down-town houses.

"The Great Night"

Fox—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

YOU'VE seen this one before—it being a favorite pattern with producers when likely stories are scarce. But since it calls for farcical treatment, it doesn't behoove anyone to take it to task if it fails to intrigue the imagination. Most pictures based upon the humorous wheeze are apt to appear mediocre unless carrying novelty and imagination. These qualities are lacking in "The Great Night." It simply tells of a youth who must marry by a certain date to inherit a fortune. Recognize it? The idea has served comedy producers for many seasons and is at its best when compressed into three reels. There are no new twists exposed here. The youth puts on his disguise or rather is forced to because of the flock of women who would marry him. The announcement gets into the papers which accounts for the feminine urge. To get out of his predicament he asks a police officer to make a cop out of him and put him on night duty to evade the girls. And his "beat" takes him to a lunch counter and behind it is the GIRL. He works fast and conquers her with his ardor, and she agrees to marry him by the specified time, though she is ignorant of his identity.

A note of melodrama is put over here—just to spice it up a bit. He stumbles upon a gang of crooks and his delay in arresting them makes him late for the ceremony. The girl has disappeared. Some mystery is released here to intrigue you, though it seems out of place. Eventually the girl bobs up in his apartment, which is perfectly proper since she is the niece of his valet. The ceremony is performed per schedule and the story ends. Were it not for the fact that everyone in the cast works hard to put it over, it would not travel far as entertainment. At that it is best suited for small downtown houses and in those neighborhoods which cater to program releases.

William Russell has had far better pictures; there is no doubt that he will have many better ones in the future. Eva Novak makes a spirited heroine.

The Cast

Larry Gilmore.....William Russell
Mollie Martin.....Eva Novak
Papita Gonzales.....Winifred Bryson
Robert Gilmore.....Henry Barrows
Jack Denton.....Wade Boteler
Simpkins.....Harry Lonsdale
Green.....Earle Metcalfe

By Joseph F. Poland. Directed by Howard M. Mitchell. Photographed by David Ables. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Young man must be married by a certain date to inherit a fortune. The anouncement gets into the papers and he is besieged by women. He disguises himself and falls in love with a waitress. She doesn't know his identity, but agrees to marry him. Before he is able to go through with the ceremony several complications occur. In the end he accomplishes his mission—getting married and finding a fortune.

Classification—Comedy-melodrama carrying story based upon familiar plot. Some excitement and adventure.

Production Highlights—The comedy spirit. The spirited performance of the star. The scene when he becomes a policeman and woos the girl. The action in the concluding reels.

Exploitation Angles—This title suggests a campaign with teaser ads. You might suggest something of the plot—asking your patrons if they would do as Larry Gilmore did here to win his inheritance.

Drawing Power—Suitable for program houses which cater to family clientele.

"Forsaking All Others"
Universal—Five Reels
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is such an appealing little story which is so recognizably real that it seems a wonder that it hasn't been thought of before. No matter where you live you will find its counterpart. Here we have the selfish mother and her mollycoddle son—the former jealous of every girl the boy favors with a glance and particularly antagonistic toward his sweetheart. This type of woman is very common, yet she has been entirely neglected by screen writers while they have painted the exaggerated virtues of those mothers who are ever performing the big mission of self-sacrifice. So put up a mark for novelty in this snug little drama of the heart and home.

It's told with a minimum of effort—which is to say that no false notes are struck off in favor of melodramatic hokum and action. What it has to say it says with emphasis right where it belongs, on the characterization and the conflict. Comes a time when the mother takes the boy away—she resorts to subterfuge to accomplish this, feigning illness to put over the trick—to keep him from the girl. Then he rebels. He actually becomes desperate and in his highly impressionable state it is no wonder that he falls for the blandishments of a designing wife. This is the type of woman who can offer a real conflict with the mother. And the latter realizes it. The jealous husband intrudes to offer a few complications. But the real point becomes evident when the mother appreciates the danger of her son's affection. She enlists the aid of the sweetheart to rescue him.

The picture is well told and builds easily and surely to its conclusion. It may be obvious; you may be able to put your finger on the climax almost from the start, yet at the same time you are conquered by its simple note, its little heart tug, and the breath of sentiment and romance which flavors it is in nearly every scene. The situations are natural and effective. The comedy moments are delightful as expressed by Colleen Moore, who, while she hasn't much to do, accomplishes her effort with genuine feeling and charm. Cullen Landis is excellent as the youth. The cast comprises June Elvidge and David Torrence. The settings are adequate.

By Mary Lermer. Scenario by Doris Schroeder. Directed by Emile Chautard. Photographed by Charles Stumar. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Youth with doting, selfish mother who is unable to see why her son should fall in love. She is antagonistic toward every girl he looks at. She takes him away from his sweetheart. Desperate, he becomes an easy prey of a designing wife, whose angry husband is hot on her trail. Finally the mother wakes up to the danger of the situation and begs the sweetheart to rescue him.

Classification—Heart interest story which will be accepted as real. Carries strong flavor of romance.

Production Highlights—The human appeal. The genuine resemblance to a slice of life. The deep understanding of the roles as interpreted by Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis. The good settings and photography. The comedy moments.

Exploitation Angles—The theme of this picture can be found in every locality. Would advise playing it up. Make a bid for the family trade. Ask your patrons if they think it is proper to interfere with the ways of romance. Expoit Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis.

Drawing Power—Once seen will be appreciated by thinking audiences.

"Kick In"
Paramount—Seven Reels
(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

GEORGE FITZMAURICE has given the screen many fine productions, but none that equal "Kick In" in story value. There's a real plot here. One that grips throughout its entire 7,000 feet. And speaking of all-star casts, it would be hard to beat the personnel of this feature. The play has been picturized before but this one is a big improvement over its predecessor.

Crook plays always appeal, especially when they are good ones. "Kick In" is a good one. Mr. Lytell assumes the role of "Chic" Hewes, which John Barrymore introduced in New York in 1914. It's a colorful role that gives the star ample opportunity to prove that he is a real artist. Miss Compson is as easy on the eyes as ever and in addition offers some emotional fireworks in this picture.

The picture has been mounted with the usual Fitzmaurice lavishness. The interiors showing the Brandon home are most elaborate. Some of the dramatic situations are the automobile accident in which a child is killed, the attempt of "Chic" to rob the district attorney's safe and the shooting of Monohan by Frou Frou, the finding of Benny fatally wounded and with a stolen necklace in his pocket and the attempts of "Chic" to dispose of the body without discovery by the police. The cabaret scene equals those in "On With The Dance," a former Fitzmaurice offering. "Kick In" is entertainment every inch of the way. It is well worth a place among the best pictures of the year.

The Cast

| Harvey Brandon | John Miltern |
| "Chic" Hewes | Bert Lytell |
| Handsome, the Yegg | Charles Stevenson |
| Jimmy Monohan | Jed Prouty |

| Jerry Brandon | Robert Agnew |
| Mrs. Brandon | Mayme Kelso |
| Molly Brandon | Betty Compson |
| Benny | Gareth Hughes |
| Myrtle | May McAvoy |
| "Whip" Fogarty | Walter Long |

Adapted by Ouida Bergere from Willard Mack's play. Directed by George Fitzmaurice. Photographed by Archer Miller.

The Story—"Chic" Hewes, released from jail, decides to follow the "straight and narrow." He gets a job, but following a robbery by one of his gang, he is summoned to "headquarters" to tell what he knows. He refuses to act as a stool pigeon. Consequently the police decide to "get" him. They get him fired from his job. "Chic" becomes acquainted with the District Attorney's daughter when her brother runs over a child. "Chic" decides to pull one more job and rob the district attorney to get funds to pay the mother "decent" damages. Tense action follows before he wins in the end and gets the girl.

Classification—A thrilling crook play well known to American theatregoers.

Production Highlights—The fine direction of George Fitzmaurice. The notable cast. The auto accident. The wonderful lighting and photographic effects. The tense action and suspense.

Exploitation Angles—This is Willard Mack's well known play made famous by John Barrymore and Jane Grey and you should play up the fact that it is a George Fitzmaurice production. Also play up the half dozen or more stars.

Drawing Power—Suitable for the finest houses in the land, anytime.

"When Love Comes"
F. B. O.—Six Reels
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN OFTEN told story is this—which hardly calls for six reels to give it proper expression. Since it is based upon a theme of misunderstanding with an interloper brought into the plot to give it substance, it is safe to say that it will appeal to one's sentiment if it does not excite one's imagination. The background is a rural village, the central characters, a couple of young romancers. The youth is timid, the girl is eager for affection. She is of the old-fashioned school. But because she is unable to explain why she couldn't meet him at the station he goes away and the girl carries her cross for five years until the love light is rekindled in her eyes in his home-coming.

It seems as if some incident should have been shown of his other affair. The scenes until he returns feature the plight of the girl, who has become an outcast of romance—a pitiful, forlorn figure. The boy comes back with a three-year-old child in his arms. And they pick up the threads of their broken romance. Everything is progressing in fine fashion until his wife appears in the role of a trouble-maker. Her entrance into the simple plot seems arbitrary—as if she is needed to enliven it with drama. There is conflict which culminates when she enlists the attention of the villagers that her husband is a scoundrel. And like most screen mobs of the rural village they condemn very easily without giving the youth a chance to appear in his own defense.

The denouement can be anticipated from the start—yet there is a heart tug to it which is appealing—brought forth largely by Helen Jerome Eddy's sincere performance as the sorrowful girl. The wife must be eliminated, however, which calls for a melodramatic flourish for a climax. She will denounce him before the world and the place to do it is at the ceremony attending the opening of the dam. The waters break through a new channel carrying the unfortunate woman to sure death. The heroine attempts to rescue her which brings the hero to the task of rescuing both of them. The wife confesses her sin before she dies and the young people are happy again. The picture does not always ring genuine, but it is good for any program house. The atmosphere is good.

The Cast

| Jane Coleridge | Helen Jerome Eddy |
| Peter Jamison | Harrison Ford |
| Aunt Susie Coleridge | Fannie Midgely |
| Marie Jamison | Claire Aubrey |
| Jim Matthews | Joseph Bell |
| Rufus Terrance | Gilbert Clayton |
| The Coleridge Twins | Buddy Messenger and Molly Gordon |
| David Coleridge | J. Barrows |
| Ruth | Fay McKenzie |

Scenario by Winifred Dunn. Produced by Ray Carroll. Directed by William A. Seiter. Photographed by Lucien Andriot.

The Story—Bashful youth in small town thinks girl favors another. Finally proposes and asks the girl to leave with him, but she is prevented from meeting him by the death of her father. Five years elapse and the girl is broken-hearted over her lost romance. The youth in the meantime has married. He returns to the town and brings his child, telling his old sweetheart that his wife has proved unfaithful. She accepts his love, but the wife turns up to make things unpleasaant. In the end the latter confesses her mistake and dies through an accident.

Classification—Heart interest story having a rural background. Based upon broken romance and misunderstanding.

Production Highlights — Sincere work of leading players. The appropriate atmosphere. Scenes when child appears. The moment when other woman intrudes. The rescue at the dam.

Exploitation Angles—Would put this over with teaser lines telling of its heart throb. Feature the human interest. Build up a campaign upon theme—asking your patrons if they would act as the characters do here.

Drawing Power—A good, little attraction for the neighborhood theatre.

"Broken Chains"

Goldwyn—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

IF THERE are any medals lying around waiting to be awarded to "best pictures of the year," let the gentlemen of the jury step right up front and tack a few on this one. There will be none to dispute the verdict.

"Broken Chains" is the best picture Goldwyn has released this year and this company has offered the industry a goodly quota of really great productions. It is the climax of Allen Holubar's career as a director of action. It presents the gifted Colleen Moore in one of the most remarkable bits of character portraiture the screen has ever seen. It brings back Ernest Torrence, who was on everybody's lips following his appearance in "Tol'able David" and who in this picture sends shivers up and down the spinal column with his villainy. We fail to recall few roles that equal his interpretation of Boyan Boone. It introduces Malcolm McGregor as a new star of filmland and shows him in a series of fistic combats with Boone that are the acme of realism. It is a picture that carries more suspense throughout its entire length than a dozen ordinary productions. It's nothing less than a living, breathing thing that seems to spring right off the screen. Its dramatic moments will thrill you as you have never been thrilled before. Its love theme will strum at the heart strings.

Most folks know that this is the scenario that won the first prize in the Chicago Daily News contest. And be it said right here that Mr. Holubar has done justice to the story. It's a prize photoplay as well as a prize scenario. The feature has been given an appropriate setting, many of the exteriors beings gems of scenic grandeur. The plot starts with a bang. We are shown, in a realistic holdup scene, that our hero is a coward. Then we are transported into the wide-open places of the west and shown the primitive passions of men at full play. It should meet with world-wide approval and the plaudits of those who have been demanding bigger and better pictures. It's the victory of the screen!

The Cast

Peter Wyndham.....Malcolm McGregor
Mercy Boone.....Colleen Moore
Boyan Boone.....Ernest Torrence
Hortense Allen.....Claire Windsor
Pat Mulcahy.....James Marcus
Mrs. Mulcahy.....Beryl Mercer
Slog Sallee.....William Orlamond
Butler.....Gerald Pring
Burglar.....Edward Peil
Gus.....Leo Willis

By Winifred Kimball. Directed by Allen Holubar. Scenario by Carey Wilson. Photographed by B. C. Haskins.

The Story—Suddenly becoming conscious of the fact that he is a coward, Peter Wyndham, is unable to assist Hortense Allen, a beautiful young neighbor, when a burglar enters his home and robs her of her jewels and kills a butler who goes to her rescue. Humiliated and ashamed of his actions, he flees from the scene and goes to his ranch in the West. Finally conquering his cowardice he goes to the rescue of little Mercy Boone who is kept chained in a lonely cabin by a cruel wretch.

Classification—A powerful drama of the West overflowing with adventure and tense, dramatic moments. A masterpiece in the true sense of the word.

Production Highlights — Allen Holubar's greatest work for the screen to date. The characterizations offered by Colleen Moore, Malcolm McGregor, Ernest Torrence and a very excellent supporting personnel. The scenes attending the holdup in the McGregor mansion. The greatest physical combat (between Boyan Boone and Peter) recorded on the screen since the days of "The Spoilers."

Exploitation Angles—This picture has had wide publicity as being the winning scenario in the Chicago Daily News contest. Tell patrons about it and the romance surrounding the writing of the story.

William Steiner-State Righter—Five Reels

(Reviewed by D. I. Gest)

IF a movie fan who witnesses "Table Top Ranch" can't guess the outcome before the first half reel is finished he has never witnessed a Western. It is a typical cowboy melodrama and doesn't depart a fraction from the usual formula—the sure-shot, 100 per cent he-man hero; the deep-dyed rancher villain and the girl. Somehow producers think it is necessary to turn out Westerns in that way. "Table Top Ranch" is strictly up to regulation.

Neal Hart is a likable, energetic, dependable sort of chap and it is a pity that he occasionally doesn't receive an original story to work on, so that his admirers can see what he really can do. Asking him to work in the strictly according-to-formula Westerns is about as thrilling as Man o' War in a morning workout. It doesn't display his real Derby qualities.

Paul Hurst is the author and prepared the scenario of "Table Top Ranch" and also had charge of the direction. He doesn't show us any new angles. The plot, as said before, is far from original. There is little to keep the spectators in suspense. A few gun fights and a little dynamiting. Somehow the hero always shoots straight and the villain misses, no matter how many shots he fires. Needless to say, the dynamite placed in the path of the hero simply stuns him momentarily. His recovery is speedy and he is "fightinger" than ever.

The early reels are given over to establishing the plot and giving the spectators some data on the exact location of the mesa on which Kate Bower's sheep range. The subtitles are rather long and somewhat obscure in their meaning. There should be some cutting there.

When Hurst has introduced the hero, the villain and the girl, you know what will happen. As usual, there is the fight on the ledge. And there the only departure from rules takes place. Instead of hurling Palque Powel into the yawning chasm, John Marvin hands him over to the law.

The Cast

John Marvin.....Neal Hart
Palque Powel.....William Quinn
Kate Bowers.....Hazel Maye

Story scenario and direction by Paul Hurst; photographer, J. Badaracco. Produced by William Steiner.

The Story—Kate Bowers owns "Table Top Ranch." Neighboring ranchers led by Powel objects to her sheep. John Marvin is her friend. Follow the usual fights; the vain attempts to kill the hero and his rescue of the girl. The villain and his band are given into the hands of the law.

Classification—A typical Western.

Production Highlights—Attempt to dynamite hero. The fight on the ledge.

Exploitation Angles—Title could be played up. Hart's name is worth a play, as Western fans like him. Wouldn't go big in the way of exploitation. Just the customary treatment for Westerns.

Drawing Powers—Will take with those who like Westerns. A side-street or neighborhood picture.

"Outcast"

Paramount—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A GENUINE slice of life is recorded in this adaptation of the play in which the star, Elsie Ferguson, scored such unbounded praise. She has brought to the screen characterization a reality—a humanity, and the same ineffable charm which must be accepted—which will be accepted as one of the finest things ever caught by the camera. Here is the human heart throb as revealed in this soul-stirring drama—a drama of a misspent life. Here is true romance—the romance of a girl who becomes a bit of human flotsam—a girl who takes to the streets through being deserted by her husband and her baby dead. Life is hopeless indeed.

Then through a man's practical joke, the heavens part and the sunshine radiates her soul. The man who "shot" her with a seltzer siphon is in need of sympathy, too. He has also become a victim of broken romance. He takes her in and they become great pals. And he appreciates that his burden is light compared to her's. This simple story of two souls attempting to find an expression of solace, sympathy and communion comes mighty close to humanity. It is a heart drama which strikes out straight and true, never veering from its logic to become sensational—never pointing toward a melodramatic effect for the sake of enlivening it with action. It's a study in the psychology of the soul. And its insight into the search for expression by two weary people is so simply expressed that it tugs at the emotions with sure strokes of life.

Miss Ferguson's performance is truly wonderful. She achieves the effect of seeming the perfect creature she pretends to be. This is sincerity of the highest order. It is positively one of the greatest contributions to the silver sheet. Her mute suffering when she thinks that her lover has discarded her is rich with pathos. There is no straining for sentiment. It is as if she could step right out of the canvas and carry her cross to the street. Very few actresses can make you feel that. Her performance carries imagination. It is as if you could read her soul—so well does she live her part. Perhaps the ending is picturey, yet it doesn't seem arbitrary in view of what has gone before. It's a vital story, well done in every particular—a picture which deserves a place with the better things. We think you'll agree with us.

The Cast

Miriam.....Elsie Ferguson
Geoffrey Sherwood.....David Powell
Tony Hewlitt.....William David
Valentine Moreland.....Mary MacLaren
John Moreland.....Charles Wellesley
Nellie Essex.....Teddy Sampson
De Valle.....William Powell

By Hubert Henry Davies. Scenario by Josephine Lovett. Directed by Chet Withey. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Girl, disillusioned with life through effort to gain a livelihood, turns to the streets. She is accosted but aid comes to her by a man who invites her to his apartment. There she discovers that he is also deep in despair. When she shows him that his plight is not so bad as hers he becomes interested in her, and eventually they become great pals and fall in love.

Classification—Human interest story carrying a real slice of life. Adaptation of play of same name with star in original role.

Production Highlights—The moral value. The scene when girl is rescued. The moment when she arouses man's sympathy. The romance. The fine production. The work of Elsie Ferguson and David Powell. The dramatic climax.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise ballyhooing fact that it is an adaptation of highly successful play, mentioning that the star appeared in the original stage production. Would suggest using a mail campaign. Should be exploited for its realities.

Drawing Power—Should draw in high class houses everywhere. Will be enjoyed particularly by feminine audiences in all kinds of theatres.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Plunder"

(Eighteen Episode Serial—Pathe)

THAT Pearl White would return to the serial field under Pathe banner, in a chapter-play out-thrilling those responsible for her popularity in this class of motion picture, was not only hoped for but expected. "Plunder," a thrill-a-minute" story by Bertram Millhauser, directed by George B. Seitz, serves the purpose with gratifying results and, judging from the first three episodes, will prove to be absorbing to the very end. It is endowed with all the serial requisites, action, speed, cast, production and moves just as a George B. Seitz production might be expected to move, with characteristic skill—gradually gaining in tempo until the end of each episode leaves curiosity at the boiling point, with a desire to go in quest of one's lost breath. Granting that Pearl White carries honors as the star, the supporting cast deserves due credit for splendid work and the cameramen for unusual effects.

Pearl Travers, much sought after heiress, owns controlling stock in the Century Building, New York. It has been discovered by an unscrupulous few that the building was created upon a site, where, three hundred years before, a treasure chest was buried. In this was the plunder of successful pirates, who brought their spoils to the shores of Manhattan Island, but were interrupted when attempting to bury it, by invading Indians. In order to maintain control and guard her fortune, Pearl survives various encounters which complications lead up to. A plot necessary to provide enough of these to hold through eighteen episodes is laid in the first three, and "on the go," "Plunder" is all that could be desired as a serial photoplay.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Man With the Twisted Lip"

(Educational—Two Reels)

STARTLING in plot, shrouded in mystery and gripping in interest is the story by Conan Doyle, which relates of the dual personality of Neville St. Clair, who, under the guise of respectability, maintained a residence, posed as a business man and deceived all who came in contact with him. A devoted father and husband and law abiding citizen during such time as he was at home, proved to be a London beggar, fraud, a habitue of the underworld, when Sherlock Holmes was called upon the case of the mysterious disappearance of St. Clair, and his evident murder.

In this story the method of tracing criminals by thumb prints is employed by the great detective, who runs the case to the bottom and then faces the grave duty of explaining the imposter's deception to his frantic wife. It would seem, however, that the detective was also a peace-maker, since before his work is done, he has re-united the couple and secured the weak man's promise to forsake such unworthy methods of securing money, and to become Neville St. Clair, a respectable business man for good and all.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Wanted a Story"

(Pathe—Two Reels)

ALTHOUGH particularly well adapted for the entertainment of junior audiences "Wanted A Story" will have a general appeal since it is so cleverly worked out and altogether well done. It embraces a cast of clever children, all of whom deliver unique characterizations, with Johnny Jones the star, supported by Gertrude Messinger, Ben Alexander, Kenneth Green and Turner Savage. The story is an inesting delineation of how the producer of "kiddie comedies" were discouraged regarding their inability to secure a suitable story for their next picture, and having about decided to give up in despair were interrupted by the entrance of a young woman who claimed to have written a story especially for the junior cast. The players are then called in to listen to the reading of the prospective play, and from thereon they are depicted as in their respective roles. There is one cut-back to indicate the interest those concerned are taking in the reading, and as the story is one about how these children were victims of shipwreck but had such a good time out of it that they forgot to hail a passing ship with a distress signal, the comedy situations are most amusing and intensely interesting. In keeping with the forerunners of this series, the photography, direction and assembling is splendid.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Ben-Her"

(Film Booking Offices of America—One Reel)

HERE is a novelty that is a novelty. The producers have hit upon the idea of burlesquing the long introduction which usually precedes a feature picture. "Ben-Her" is "directed by chance," "passed up by the bored censors," "hindered by lack of capital" and produced by "Agony Pictures." It is, according to the caption "a Fighting Production," and the author "acknowledges his indebtedness to all the furniture houses."

These and many more just as good constitute the greater part of the picture. There is little pictorial matter—just a series of "gag" titles. We prophecy success for this bit of nonsense. It is sure-fire. Audiences will like this kind of satire, and the wise showman will be glad to grab this novelty—because it is just that. Nothing like it has ever reached the screen. It should get more laughs than the average two-reel comedy.—LAURENCE REID.

"One Jump Ahead"

(Pathe—Two Reels)

LEO MALONEY has become identified as the hero of the Range Rider Series, and in "One Jump Ahead" gives one of the best performances as the admirable westerner. There is nothing particular new about the story, but it is so filled with action that it grips the interest and introduces a distinct scenic value, showing horsemen going over trails seemingly beyond trespass.

Maloney is a Ranger on trail of a gang of desperados who make it their business to appear as cattle buyers, paying cash for stock, then waylaying the man to whom money has been paid, with a view to robbing him.

In this instance the ranchman is protected by Maloney as an officer of the law, and a prospective son-in-law, since there is a pretty daughter also, in consideration. There is a good cast, embracing splendid types for the parts, thrilling fight scenes and enough love interest to lend further attraction. A thoroughly clean entertaining type of "western" two reeler.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Chickasha Bone Crusher"

("Leather Pusher" Series—Two Reels)

PLENTY of humor, plenty of punch, plenty of action characterizes "The Chickasha Bone Crusher," the latest of the new "Leather Pusher" series which Universal is exploiting. Here we have Reginald Denny as champion of the world, traveling with a circus and meeting all comers. He is to be knocked off his feet within a certain time limit or forfeit a wad of money. The action is exceedingly breezy and will delight the boys who worship the manly art. The show hits Chickasha, Oklahoma, and a big cowboy takes up the challenge. He is bigger than the champion but the bigger they are the harder they fall. And he is floored time and again—not only by our hero, but by his own momentum when his fists strike nothing but the air. The circus jumps to New Orleans and the cowboy is determined to wrest the crown from the champion. But his wife is eager to have him back on his ranch. So there enters a bit of a plot in which the battle is fought in the dressing room. The rancher takes the count again and acknowledges his defeat. "The Chickasha Bone Crusher" carries a wallop and is realistic and full of pep and spirit.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Beryl Coronet"

(Educational—Two Reels)

A TALE by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle furnishes the foundation for this two reel detective story-film. Eillie Norwood and Hubert Willis hold their own in the respective roles of Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson. There are a few players necessary to impersonate other characters involved. All are very satisfactory.

This time Holmes is visited by the head of a banking firm, who describes a mysterious attempt at the theft of the Beryl Coronet, which the banker happened to be holding as a client's security. What happened is described on the screen up to the point of Holmes taking the case; thereafter, his method of unraveling the mystery, taking place in action. It would appear the man's own son was the thief, but with the detective's keen insight, proof is secured which lays the crime at the feet of a fortune hunting young peer, who also had designs upon the inheritance of the banker's niece. There is sufficient action to hold the interest of detective story enthusiasts and the subject is well done.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Natural Born Liar"

(Bruce-Educational—Two Reels)

THERE is an amusing trend to this scenic, which takes up the adventures of two prospectors, finding one absorbed in keeping the Sabbath and the other acting as cook. Over the gorgeous northwestern hills, at a distance, approaches a horseman, whose destination proves to be the camp. In hospitable fashion the prospectors invite the ranger to share their provisions. The "natural born liar," who enjoys the description of imaginative experiences of a thrilling nature, entertains his guest by relating episodes that bring into the picture views of such places as the traveler has covered, lending the desired scenic value, and illustrating the extent of the cook's imagination, which is responsible for the main title of "the natural born liar."—LILLIAN GALE.

Around Buffalo's Branches

J. R. LEVEE has succeeded Col. P. H. Smith as manager of the Buffalo Warner Brothers exchange in the Beyer film building at Pearl and Tupper. Mr. Levee has been in Buffalo before. Four years ago he was manager of the local World Film office. He has also been with United Picture Theatres of America in St. Louis and with Paramount at the home office in New York. He resigned from the latter company a few weeks ago to go with W. B. Two special representatives are now working in the Buffalo territory. They are Martin Solomon, formerly with Universal, and Jerry Sobel, recently field superintendent with Ringling Brothers- Barnum & Bailey circus. Col. Smith went to New York last week. He has not as yet announced his plans for the future.

Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Metro exchange, held a sales conference in his office, Saturday, December 2. He announces that a kettle will be placed in front of the film vault Christmas week. Exhibitors, who come in crying about poor business, will be invited to step into the vault and help themselves. The next day when they return the films, they can drop a few coins in the kettle to help pay the expenses of the exchange, says Mr. Kahn. Kahn Weeks are now being observed. This big booking event opened December 3 and will continue until December 16. Everything is booked solid in the key cities for these two weeks. Ted O'Shea, Metro salesman, is a lucky cuss. He had spare tires stolen off his Henry-built twice in two weeks. It is said that one burglar tried to get the car off the spare time, but was unsuccessful.

Kansas City Film Row News

Another familiar figure is lost to Kansas City's film colony—Roy E. Churchill, manager of the Kansas City F. B. O. branch, who last week resigned to take charge of the Goldwyn office in Omaha, Neb. Warwick T. Boles and George Minor, who have been operating the Lewis theatre in Independence, Mo., have purchased the house from John E. Lewis, it was announced Wednesday.

A crowd of job seekers hung close to the stove in the Kansas City, Kas., branch of the state free employment bureau last Monday. The telephone rang and the crowd heard Charles R. Mills, superintendent, reply:

"You say you want two men to act as sheiks?"

Further conversation was drowned out by a rush of feet towards the wicker window. Then a rumble of voices broke forth, offering acceptance.

"Don't crowd, gentlemen," Mills said. "Those who qualify for this job must be ex-service men and good horseback riders."

"I'm your man," said a tall fellow in the rear.

"Me, too," yelped another. "I've been in Algeria."

"I don't know what a sheik is, but I can ride," came from a third.

Mills explained that his caller was a motion picture exhibitor who wanted two ex-service men who were good riders to wear costumes of sheiks and ride about the city to exploit "The Sheik."

Approximately 3,000 bundles of old clothes, the "standard" of admittance charge to the Mayor Cromwell—Jackie Coogan "Warm Clothes Matinee" at the Doric theatre, Kansas City, last Saturday, were received at the ticket window from children who saw "Oliver Twist." In the 3,000 bundles were 20,000 separate garments, which were turned over by the Allied Charities to the Provident Association for distribution.

C., one of the Howard-Wells houses, has accepted a position as manager of the New Garden theatre at West Palm Beach, Florida, owned by Carl Kettler. He has already gone to the Florida resort city to assume his new duties and Mrs. Stellings will follow him after the holidays.

R. D. Craver, of the Broadway, Charlotte, recently attended the annual convention of the American Association of Bottlers. Craver, besides owning a film exchange and several theatres, operates the Midas Mineral Springs on his "ranch" near Charlotte and supplies thousands of gallons of table water daily to Charlotte consumers.

Cincinnati Close-Ups

The Lyric theatre, Vine street picture house, which is owned by the Vine Street Lyric Theater Company, headed by I. W. McMahan and Jerome M. Jackson, will become the home of light opera on December 24, under the management of the Dunbar Opera Company.

For several months past the Lyric has been operated as a picture theatre under the receivership of P. W. Scarborough. It was rumored at various times that offers had been made for the theatre by interests high in theatrical circles. At one time negotiations were practically completed for its sale to the Fox Film Company, which planned to use the theatre as an outlet for their productions in Cincinnati. The deal ultimately failed, and the house was continued by McMahan and Jackson until it was placed under a receivership.

Edward Ritchie, the attorney representing the Dunbar interests, stated that the season of opera will be conducted without a lifting of the present receivership of the property, but that a decree of sale has been entered for the entire property.

The change of policy at the Lyric theatre removes from the Cincinnati theatrical field a partnership that long has been active in motion picture circles, as the names of I. W. McMahan and Jerome Jackson have been identified with motion picture activities, both in the exchange and exhibitor field, for the past nineteen years.

The recent purchase of the Gifts theatre by Williams Bein from McMahan and Jackson was made for Jules Frankel and associates, according to an announcement just made. Mr. Bein acted as personal representative for the Frankel interests and will be identified with them in the management of the house. The new owners, who also operate the Empress theatre and a group of motion picture houses, have taken charge of the Gifts, and will continue to operate as a first-run house.

Max Stearn, theatre owner of Columbus, Ohio, and Miss Leila Rusk, of Columbus, were married at the Hotel Gibson, Cincinnati, recently. Many Cincinnati and Columbus friends were present. Following a box party at the Grand Opera House members of the wedding party were the guests of Attorney Lem. S. Miller at a dinner at the Hotel Sinton.

Washington Briefs

Tuesday's meeting at the York theatre of the Crandall chain was attended by nearly 600 school children sent to see the Safety Drive film, "Don't Get Hurt," made by Manager Nat Glasser. Dr. David Covell, of the Trinity Diocesan Community House of Washington, spoke on the theory of more active co-operation of children in being their brother's keepers, in the matter of safety from traffic dangers. Mrs. Locher informs us that this is the first week of devoting the Crandall playhouses to community betterment. The next movement is in aid of the Juvenile Protective Association and the Municipal Playgrounds. Mrs. Bertha Taylor Voorhorst and Mrs. Susie Roots Rhoades, with the Crandall Playground film shown, Nat Glasser having made them for Mrs. Locher and Mrs. Rhoades, last summer at the District's Municipal Playgrounds. Fallas Brouche, manager of the Metropolitan, has spread himself in interior decoration since the birth of a young hopeful, and is receiving congratulations on the way he has toned up the house with real cut flowers. "Mums" were the theme during the football season, and now American Beauties are filling the lobby with their beauty and fragrance. Visitors from out of town are surprised to learn that these are real flowers, not the artificial or papier mache kind.

---

Nelson B. Bell, of the Metropolitan, after showing us the booking list for the next few weeks at Crandall's, said, with apologies to Coue, "Every way, in every way, they are getting better and better." However, Harry M. and Nelson B. have no monopoly on the better booking idea, as all of Washington's fiirst run houses are stretching every nerve to secure really praiseworthy bookings for the seat of government. Therefore, the remark refers to all District photo-premiere houses.

All houses here have done a good business Thanksgiving Week, despite the opening of Poli's and the New National. Apparently the assembly of Congress for the third and fourth sessions of the retiring 67th, and the consequent influx of tourists and holiday visitors, the Saturday football crowds, and the usual custom of suburban dwellers to winter in the city, all add to the box-office music.

Seattle News

Frank Jacobs, local photographer, who makes the Liberty News for Manager Leroy V. Johnson's Liberty theatre each week, got a big scoop last week, and is showing the results on the Liberty screen this week.

Jacobs was on the scene at the local aviation field when Lieut. Frank Tyndall, a local army aviator, took off for a trial spin in a new monoplane. A few moments after he was up, Tyndall's plane crashed in Elliott Bay from a heighth of several thousand feet, as a result of crumpled wings. Tyndall made his escape by parachute, and landed safely on the waterfront.

After Jacobs had taken a few shots of the take-off, he was about to leave when he saw the accident. He immediately got his camera into play and, although over two miles from the scene, he got some wonderful footage of the falling plane. As soon as it hit the water he packed his camera in his car and was off to the spot where Tyndall landed. He arrived there as the aviator touched the ground, and got the first shots of him as he arose from the ground, tangled in his parachute and still dazed.

When screened at the Liberty, the footage of the falling plane was shown twice, to accustom the audience with the shot, which showed the plane as a small speck, falling through space and landing in the bay with a splash.

A partial victory has been won by the motion picture theatre owners of Palmyra, Lebanon County, Pa., in their fight against the proposed borough tax of $150 a year on every motion picture theatre.

An ordinance providing this tax was passed by the borough council, but the theatre men made such strong arguments in opposition to the levy, pointing out that it would force small theatres out of business that Burgess Ream vetoed the measure. Immediately afterward the council adopted a new measure reducing the tax to $50 a year, and this ordinance became at once effective.

"Joy Week" Short Subject List

Universal Announces Long List for Week of Dec. 24th to 30th

TO meet the mid-winter demands and to provide a strong program for the week of December 24 to 30, which Universal has characterized as "Joy Week," that film company has arranged a selection of short subjects for release during the present month. In addition to the especially chosen features for the regular release schedule, several additions have been prepared, outstanding among which are two "New Leather Pushers" and two new editions of "The Mirror."

The month's output from Universal exchanges will include four Universal comedies of one reel each and four new Century Comedies of two reels each. The comedies will consist of two featuring Lew Sargent, the boy comedian, and two featuring Neely Edwards, tramp comedian, who has made his "Nervy Ned" series popular in the short subjects field. The Sargent comedies are "A Rip-Snoring Night," released December 4th, and "A Dog Gone Day," released December 18th. Both are from the "messenger boy series," which Sargent is making for Universal. The Neely Edwards comedies are "Rail Birds," for December 11th, and "Where's the Parade?" for Christmas Day.

The four Century comedies for the month, in the order of their release, are "Women First," "A Small Town Derby," "Me and My Mule" and "The Tattle Tail." These comedies are released each Wednesday.

The two new "Leather Pushers," to be released in December, mark the beginning of a new series of six of the two-reelers made from H. G. Witwers' funny prize ring stories, picturized by Harry Pollard, Universal director, with Reginald Denny in the leading role. The first of the new series is called "Young King Cole" and was released December 4th. The succeeding units of the series are to be released at fortnightly intervals, so the second one, "He Raised Kane," will be released December 18th.

International News Reel Corporation is releasing two new issues of "The Mirror," No. 3 on December 4th and No. 4 on the 18th. "Mirror" No. 3 is titled "The Birth of Aviation" and shows the Wrights: and other aeronautical pioneers making the first bird-hops of history. These are contrasted with the latest models in military and commercial planes. "Mirror" No. 4 will deal with the world-stirring pomp and ceremonies attending the death and burial of King Edward VII of Great Britain and the crowning of his successor, the present King George V, and the investiture of the present Prince of Wales.

The Universal short subjects for December also include "The Siege of the Lancashire Queen," a two-reel Fish Patrol picture, starring Jack Mulhall and taken from one of Jack London's stories. "Kings of the Forest," a two-reeler, starring Roy Stewart, will be put on the market December 18th. It is another of the lumberjack stories, detailing the life, loves and adventures of the logging camp.

Added to these two short dramas, Universal has re-edited and retitled two of Harry Carey's most popular pictures of several years ago. They are "The Texas Sphinx" and "The Golden Bullet," originally three-reel westerns which have been quickened to two reels. They will be released on December 9th and 30th, respectively.

The fourth release, on March 18th, will show "Duck Shooting on Waponeca Lake." The remaining two of the series are yet to be announced.

These single-reel productions, it is said, will have a widespread ap-

Mr. Warner, working in co-operation with the Branch Exchanges of the Hodkinson Corporation, has managed to perfect an unusually strong tie-up through the columns of his magazine, Field and Stream. By making a powerful appeal to fishing and hunting clubs, sportsman's supply stores, arms and ammunition manufacturers, etc., petitions bearing the names of sportsmen have been turned over to exhibitors for their use in exploiting the "Rod and Gun" series.

Exploitation Campaign For One Reel Subject

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., in collaboration with Scientific American, has arranged an elaborate exploitation campaign on the one-reel subject, "Via Radio." A. C. Lescarboura, managing editor of Scientific American, is sending material for talks on this picture to every broadcasting station in the United States, and several of the most powerful stations are among the many that will broadcast this material to the millions of radio listeners. Scientific American will also carry a story on the instructive value of the picture, advising everyone interested in radio, either as a science or as an amusement, to see the production. The story will appear in the January issue.

Educational has prepared a comprehensive advertising campaign incorporated in a combination press sheet and broadside for exhibitor use. In addition to the posters, lobby photos, cuts, mats, slides, etc., a specially designed window card will be issued.

"Via Radio" is a topic of intense interest to millions of people throughout the United States, and these eagerly devour every word printed about their favorite amusement.

Burr Completes Third of Comedy Series

The third of the "All-Star" Comedies being produced by C. C. Burr for release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has just been completed and will shortly be ready for distribution through the nationwide releasing unit of the latter company.

Titled "A Social Error" and featuring in its cast Ray McKee, Charlie Murray and Mary Anderson, all of whom have appeared in the first two releases "Faint Heart" and "The Four Orphans," this production with its splendid supporting cast which includes Flora Finch, Georgia Russel and an unusually large array of other players, is said to be a most pretentious one not only in cast and story but in the magnitude of its sets as well.

National M. P. League Lists Hurd Comedy

Included in the current bulletin issued by the National Motion Picture League as recommended for family showing is "Railroading," the latest Earl Hurd comedy distributed by Educational.

Century Comedies Announced for January

WHAT is described as "an exceptionally fine program" is offered by Century for January, including on January 3rd, "American Plan," with Lee Moran, Blanche Payson and Betty May, under the direction of Al Herman; January 10th, "Sting 'Em Sweet," featuring Brownie and the Wonder Dog, supported by Jack Cooper, Ena Gregory and Jack Earle, directed by Al Raymaker; January 17th, "Hee Haw," featuring Arthur Trimble and Harry Sweet, in search of a home, directed by Al Herman; January 24th, "Farm Follies," which tells the story of a stranded theatrical troupe where the girls are forced to earn their keep on the farm, much to the worry of the farmer's wife, played by Blanche Payson. Jack Cooper and "The Century Beauties" also appear in "Farm Follies," and January 31st is the release date for "Atta Boy," a baseball story starring Lee Moran directed by Al Herman.

"Colonel Heeza Liar" Returns to Screen

J. R. Bray, president of Bray Productions, Inc., announces the return of "Colonel Heeza Liar" to the screen for a farewell tour in a series of single reel adventures under the general title of "Bray Comedies," to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. His first appearance will be on December 10 in his own version of "Treasure Island." Other releases will follow at intervals of four weeks.

"Colonel Heeza Liar" was the leading character in the first animated cartoons to appear in motion picture theatres. The Colonel made such a hit that the series of cartoons under his name ran for several years. It was finally abandoned under pressure of more urgent work by the Bray Studios of a more or less scientific character.

Tremendous advances have been made in the motion picture art during the Colonel's retirement, as the new series of comedies will be so far in advance of the old as to be unrecognizable except for the familiar features of the Colonel himself and his fertility of resources in escaping from hopeless situations.

"Bridle-Grooms" New Hallroom Boys Comedy

It's just as essential these days to have good stable manners as good table manners, say Percy and Ferdie in their newest Hallroom Boys comedy—and this release, number nine on the new series and titled appropriately, "Bridle-Grooms" indicates that the Hallroom Boys are "there" in this respect.

Harry Cohn and Director Noel Mason Smith have made a comedy said to be replete with funny situations.

Sid Smith is featured as Percy, and George Williams assists him as his side-kick, Ferdie.

Pathe Dec. 17 Program Listed

Eleven Subjects of Varied Natures Outlined in Holiday Entertainment

IN the Pathé release program for Dec. 17 of eleven subjects—including Pathé News Nos. 102 and 103 and Topics of the Day No. 51—the Johnny Jones Series is represented by a novel production entitled "Wanted: A Story," in 2 reels. It consists of an introductory scene in which a young woman author reads her scenario to the producing management in the presence of the young star and his supporting cast who are to decide the question of acceptance or rejection.

The scenario pictures the whole company with a "flivver" and various articles of furniture on a raft finding refuge from a shipwreck on a "cannibal island." The children set up house-keeping on the shore; their ingenuity enables them so to amuse the natives that they come to no harm; on the contrary, their "fairy story" lives are so pleasant that they stop looking for a passing ship to rescue them.

A real novelty for the screen in the Oregon Trail Series romance and reality picture of the sheep industry produced by the Kiser Studios, Inc., and entitled, "Fleeced for Gold." The romance part is a mere thread, showing a girl who won't marry the youth she loves until he "does something." The western sheep ranch operated by his aunt gives him his chance. Soon he is manager of the enterprise—the operation of which is pictured in detail. Thousands of sheep, with shepherds and their dogs, are shown among the hills, in the folds, counted, washed, shorn, branded, and the bales of wool carted away.

The Hal Roach comedy offering in the 1-reeler called "Fair Week," with Paul Parrott andJobyna Ralston. Parrott is Farmer Appleknocker's hired man. He carries a large roll of bills at the County Fair, and falls for the "shell game."

In the Harold Lloyd 1-reel comedy re-issue, with Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard, called "Heap Big Chief," after the hero has outwitted all his savage foes he is seen surrounded with an embarrassment of fair savage affection.

"Henry's Busted Romance," Aesop's Film Fable deals with a wiser and better husband—after a series of "vamping" experiences, all with the usual animal characters.

Pathé Review No. 186 shows some rope-climbing at Chimney Rock, N. C., pictures Florida natives taming man-eating sharks, in "Living Paintings" presents another illustration of the marvels of motion picture expert camera work, and shows the "City of Watchers," Bonifacio, Corsica, in Pathecolor.

Fox News Has Excellent Staff

Pictures of Mustapha Kemal and Turkish Dictator's Staff Obtained

IT has been announced that Fox News has established a foreign department which will devote its entire time to obtaining pictures of news events of international interest in all parts of the world outside of the United States.

With camermen in Europe, in the Orient, in Africa and in South America, it is conceded that this organization is among the best of its kind in the industry today. Starting with a comprehensive plan of action, the co-operation of the workers of every department and a staff of 1,000 cameramen in the field, Fox News has steadily increased its service until at the present time it controls a large number of the best cameramen of the world. Practically every city in America of more than 25,000 population is represented by a Fox cameraman. Seventy-eight have been added during the past year.

The cameramen of the New York staff often are sent to other countries to film events and novel features of particular interest to the American public. Free lance cameramen in all parts of the world carry Fox News credentials and they are pledged to send to this news reel at least one subject each week.

Approximately 60,000 feet of negative are submitted each week from which the Fox News editorial forces select the two news reels. Only negatives of subjects of national interest and of exceptional quality are accepted. With the addition of the foreign desk, the points in all the other parts of the globe will be covered to better advantage. For this purpose John Pakerson, editor of Fox News in Paris, has been called to America for conference and will bring with him Frederick Fesneau, who has been covering the Far East and the Turko-Grecian War.

Fesneau has just scored what probably is the biggest "scoop" of the year in obtaining pictures of Mustapha Kemal and his staff at the Turkish Dictator's headquarters at Brousse, Asia Minor.

Messinger and Earle Make Appearances

Buddie Messinger Century's newest star and Jack Earle, the seven foot three giant who appears with Baby Peggy in her fairy tales, made personal appearances at the Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, in connection with Joe Bonner's Revue given at that theatre at the same time as two pictures he appeared in, one a feature, "Affinities," the other a Century Comedy, "A Small Town Derby." In the feature Bonner played the comedy role opposite Colleen Moore and John Bowers.

Through the courtesy of Julius and Abe Stern, heads of Century Comedies, Bonner appeared in a special revue, and Messinger and Earle made curtain speeches. Some of the "Century Beauties" such as Betty May, Jeanne Hope and Lois Boyd appeared also.

Production-Distribution Activities

"Shadows" Booked Over Loew Circuit

"SHADOWS," the first of the Tom Forman Productions for Preferred-Lichtman release, has been booked over the Loew circuit beginning January 8. The deal just closed by the Al Lichtman Corporation includes all of the theatres on the Loew circuit in Greater New York and involves close onto 100 days.

The picture opens at the Hippodrome, Cleveland, and at the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, next week, for week stands in each city.

Columbia Classes Are Shown "Shadows"

The classes in studio technique and photoplay construction at Columbia University were given a showing of "Shadows," an Al Lichtman release on Monday, November 27th.

Arrangments were made for the students to see this picture in order that they might ascertain what sort of material producers are seeking. Following the showing, it was decided to submit to a committee a number of original scripts which are to be written by the members of the classes. This special committee will decide on the three best. These are then to be turned over to Preferred Pictures, Inc., producers of "Shadows" to ascertain whether or not they contain suitable material for production use.

Montana's Next is "They Call It Dancing"

"They Call It Dancing" has been selected as the title of the next Bull Montana comedy, according to information received at the New York offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of this series of comedies, from Hunt Stromberg, their producer. In it the comedian will be seen as a distinguished dancing master, at the head of a school of classical dancers. The famous Denishawn dancers will appear in the picture.

With the announcement of the title of Bull's next picture comes an explanation of the comedian's sudden and recent devotion to the terpsichorean art. Bull has been busy taking dancing lessons and is said to have developed a remarkable proficiency.

Laemmle Policy Radical Change

Universal Chief Inaugurates "Look Before You Book" Plan for Exhibitors

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, this week inaugurated one of the most sensational and radical policy changes which has struck the motion picture industry in many years. He has taken the first step in a move to assure a "look before you book" policy on the part of exhibitors. He has gone even farther than this by making it obligatory for exhibitors to see certain Universal pictures before booking them.

Taking "The New Leather Pushers," a new series of six two-reelers made from H. G. Witwer's popular prize ring stories, as a working tryout for the new policy, Mr. Laemmle has instructed all Universal exchanges that no bookings are to be taken on any of the six new pictures, until the prospective purchaser has seen the entire six. "The New Leather Pushers" series was chosen because, in a limited way, it corresponds to series of big feature productions. The six pictures, made by Harry Pollard, with Reginald Denny as the star, are listed as Universal Jewel productions.

Mr. Laemmle long has preached a "look before you book" policy to exhibitors and has been foremost in facilitating Universal's exhibitor patrons to adopt this policy. He has consistently inveighed against the fallacy of booking a year or six months' supply of pictures at once and has time and time again urged the theatre owner to have pictures screened before contracting for them.

Goldwyn Scores Publicity Stunt

Half Dollars for a Quarter Gain Space in Newspapers for "A Blind Bargain"

GOLDWYN'S publicity force kicked another exploitation goal last week with "A Blind Bargain," repeating their coup for "Brothers Under the Skin" of a week or two ago. Howard Dietz and Eddie Bonns wanted another big splash for "A Blind Bargain."

With the connivance of W. R. Ferguson they engaged a man named Jack Cohen, of 58 Manhattan avenue, to sell half dollars at the price of twenty-five cents to sophisticated New Yorkers. The half dollars were in small envelopes marked "Blind Bargain," and Cohen attempted to sell them in front of the Capitol theatre and along Broadway. The curious crowded around him and listened to his spiel, but they didn't buy—not even one. They were afraid of being gold-bricked—for a quarter.

Patrolman Harty of the West Forty-seventh street precinct, chased him off Broadway, but Cohen returned, hoping, as had Dietz and Bonns, that the policeman would place him under arrest. After chasing him away twice, Harty finally did arrest the man for peddling without a license and he was tried before Magistrate Rytteberg in the West Side Court and fined $2.

The stunt was good "human interest" stuff, and the reporters went to it. They told how Cohen had bet with a friend of his from St. Louis, William Wolf, a shoe salesman living temporarily at 544 West 163d street, that the average New York man was perfectly willing, even anxious, to be plucked if there was any chance of getting something for nothing, or doubling his money. Wolf said they were the hardest boiled birds in the world and that they had been left in the water too long. They wagered $200 each that Cohen couldn't, within fifteen minutes, sell a Broadway crowd $50 worth of half dollars at twenty-five cents each. Cohen was trying to sell the coins at half price when he was arrested with all of the 100 half dollars in his possession.

"Monte Cristo" to Have London Showing

To the number of Fox Film masterpieces now being shown in England will shortly be added their magnificently produced screen version of "Monte Cristo," adapted from the world-famous novel by Alexandre Dumas. According to a recent announcement, it will commence a special season at a leading London theatre in the very near future.

"Bulldog Drummond" In Fox Houses

AN important booking announcement has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that the Fox Circuit has booked the melodrama "Bulldog Drummond," adapted from the stage success by "Sapper" and featuring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley into 17 theatres in Greater New York and vicinity.

This contract covers 12 theatres in New York City and Brooklyn, among them being some of the largest and best of the Fox Circuit.

Furthermore, it is stated that this contract covers theatres controlled by Fox in New Jersey and Connecticut. Among the most important of these are the New Britain Theatre, New Britain, Conn., American, Paterson, N. J., Terminal and American, Newark, N. J. and Liberty Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J.

It is further announced that Bim's Schuyler, 103rd Street, West End and Standard have also contracted for this Hodkinson release.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" Approved in Wires

Arthur H. Sawyer, of S-L Pictures and supervising director of Associated Pictures Corporation, has been the recipient of a flood of congratulatory telegrams and letters since the screening of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" by Metro in New York, prior to its general release throughout the country. Under the personal supervision of Mr. Sawyer, Clarence Badger wielded the megaphone in the production of the initial Associated Pictures Corporation offering.

Burr Rapidly Disposes of Territory

EVIDENCE of the rapidity with which C. C. Burr is disposing of territory on his various features was illustrated this week when it was announced that Johnny Hines' latest feature "Luck" was sold to Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures for New York State and Northern New Jersey; to Skirboll Brothers Gold Seal Productions of Cleveland, for Ohio and Kentucky; to Columbia Film Service of Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory, and to Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

"Blind Justice," now definitely titled "The Last Hour," was also purchased by Metro Film Exchange for its territory as was "Fires of Youth" and "Secrets of Paris," both C. C. Burr products.

"Secrets of Paris" which has just completed a record-breaking week at Fays theatre in Providence, has been sold to Skirboll Brothers Gold Seal Productions of Cleveland, Major Film Company of Boston for the entire New England States, Supreme Film Company of Los Angeles for distribution on the coast, and all foreign rights with the exception of Alaska and Newfoundland to William Vogel, New York City.

"Adam's Rib" Nearing Completion

Cecil B. De Mille is said to have outdone himself in "Adam's Rib," by Jeanie Macpherson, his latest Paramount picture, which is now nearing completion at Paramount's West Coast studios.

The Chicago Board of Trade, with its wheat and corn pits, was reproduced with fidelity to make real the scenes where Milton Sills wins and loses a fortune in grain trading.

Colorful in more ways than one is the revolution in which Theodore Kosloff as the King of Morania, is overthrown.

Then there is the natural history museum where Elliott Dexter and Pauline Garson start a pleasing romance. This is the set which Jesse L. Lasky called an "adequate refutation to the argument that there's 'nothing new in pictures.'"

Latest Johnny Hines Picture Finished

After seven weeks it was announced this week that production on Johnny Hines' latest feature comedy-drama "Luck" produced by C. C. Burr at the latter's Glendale Studio, was completed and has gone into the cutting room for final assemblage and titling. This task will probably consume another two weeks with the result that "Luck" will be ready for showing about December fifteenth.

"Dangerous Age" Has Big Week

Paterson Exploitation Will be Followed by National Advertising

AFTER the unusual exploitation given "The Dangerous Age" at Paterson, N. J., the latest John M. Stahl film concluded one of the biggest weeks that city has ever known. The week concluded by showing standing room at each and every performance during the evenings and exceptional business during the afternoon shows.

Cameron Dooley, the house manager, designates it as one of the most satisfying weeks he has ever known.

The Louis B. Mayer offices, where Paul Mooney holds sway as executive head, are becoming more active this year than has been their wont during the past.

Where formerly Mr. Mayer permitted his press and advertising details to be handled by the concerns through which he distributed, he is now actively engaged in the expenditure of large sums of money, both in national media and to aid exhibitors and rental agencies in territorial activities.

For "The Dangerous Age" a number of reservations for pages in the Saturday Evening Post have been made and First National will reap vast benefits from these, as one-inch displays in the Post will precede the actual displays as well as newsstand cards calling attention to the announcement will be distributed for showings in newsstands.

The National Newspaper Syndicate, which controls the magazine sections of twenty-one leading Sunday papers, is to be utilized both for advertising and service co-operation on both "The Dangerous Age" and "Hearts Aflame," Reginald Barker's newest melodramatic production. "Hearts Aflame" will receive distribution through Metro, while "The Dangerous Age" goes through Associated First National.

Many forms of exhibitor co-operation are being organized by the Mayer office under the direction of Harry Reichenbach, Mildred Phillips and Perry M. Charles.

Miss Phillips, a special writer, formerly on the editorial staff of the Syracuse Post-Standard and various New York dailies, is what Reichenbach terms an editorial alchemist. It is her function to take the conventional matter usually sent East by studio press departments and convert it into matter susceptible to daily paper acceptance. Miss Phillips has specialized in re-write work in addition to her creative effort and she is bound to open a new field. At least one thing is certain, conventional and academic matter will have no room at the Mayer office.

Perry Charles, who handled the physical end of the Paterson, N. J., engagement of "The Dangerous Age," will have charge of various local engagements of both films. Mr. Charles, a comparatively newcomer, attracted attention by his unusual handling of Mabel Normand's European trip. A complete account of the past and proposed activities of the Mayer exploitation enterprises will be given in a ten-page service section in this issue. It is a reporter's observations of the campaign on "The Dangerous Age" and an outline of future efforts in behalf of this production.

Lichtman Promises Big Pictures

Wires Enthusiasm to Exchanges After Reviewing Latest Productions

THE various Al Lichtman exchanges throughout the country this week received a telegram from Lichtman who is now on the coast in which the distributor promises exhibitors real box office pictures. Lichtman frankly admits that those pictures now in the making are being made "deliberately with the attempt to turn out even greater pictures and with exactly the peculiar appeal contained in 'Rich Men's Wives.'"

Lichtman is now conferring with B. P. Schulberg at the studio regarding winter and spring releases. Shortly after his arrival at the studio he saw "The Hero" and "Are You a Failure?" in the projection room and then sent out the following wire to exchanges:

"I just experienced the extreme pleasure of reviewing our next two productions, 'The Hero' and 'Are You a Failure?' and without mental reservations of any kind I am proud to say that these two pictures are superior to any you have had from us to date. You may, without any hesitancy, spread this information to all exhibitors in your territory as the pictures themselves will say more than I can convey to you.

"Our next two pictures, 'Poor Men's Wives' and 'The Girl Who Came Back,' now in the course of production, are being prepared with the attempt to turn out even greater pictures and with exactly the same peculiar appeal contained in 'Rich Men's Wives' only bigger. From rushes on 'Poor Men's Wives' seen to date this result will be accomplished."

Exploitation Angles On "Ninety And Nine"

"The Ninety and Nine," Vitagraph's new special production, based on the famous melodrama by Ramsay Morris, offers the exhibitors a peculiar situation in that there will be two separate and distinct angles of exploitation, the biblical story of the lost sheep and the thrilling dash of the rescue train through the burning forest.

"The Ninety and Nine" will be released early in January. It was produced under the direction of David Smith and the leading roles are played by Colleen Moore, Gertrude Astor and Warner Baxter.

"The Chased Bride" or December Release List

"The Chased Bride," the Christie Comedy on Educational's release list for the first week of December, is described as a comedy of regular human beings, with Neal Burns getting down to every day affairs again after galloping around the desert in comedy vein in "That Son of a Sheik" and then cooling off on a houseboat in "Ocean Swells."

The title of the picture is quite apropos, since most of the business of the plot is done by Burns in a taxicab, on a handcar and on a stray switch engine trying to keep up with his bride, who is about to be forced into marrying somebody else.

"The Chased Bride" is the first Christie Comedy this season which is written around a wedding. Christie used to be the most noted producer of wedding and married-life themes, but this year he has been giving us a little different type of comedy, including satires and costume play comedies.

Marion Davies Subject of Art Contest

AN amateur art contest with Marion Davies as the inspiring subject, was held in Los Angeles in connection with the showing of the Cosmopolitan picture "When Knighthood Was In Flower" starring Miss Davies. Many noted artists both in this country and abroad have painted portraits of Miss Davies and she was recently selected by E. O. Hoppe as one of the five most beautiful women in America.

By arrangement with Grauman's Rialto theatre the Los Angeles Herald offered six pairs of tickets daily for the six best crayon, pen and ink or charcoal drawings of the fair star of "When Knighthood Was In Flower."

Drawings poured in at such a rate that the Rialto theatre was fairly swamped with them. Some were good and some were bad. A few of the best were reproduced in the Herald.

"Blind Bargain" Press Book Issued

Two of the most powerful and distinct characterizations which Lon Chaney has ever contributed to the screen may be found in Goldwyn's photoplay, "A Blind Bargain," founded upon Barry Payn's unique story, "The Octave of Claudius," which is on view at the Capitol theatre, New York, this week.

Photos of Chaney in these two widely differentiated roles have been used largely by Goldwyn in the preparation of its advertisements, its posters, stills and accessories for the picture. They may be found in the big exhibitors' press and service book for "A Blind Bargain," which is just off the presses.

Fashion Show Part of Dwan Production

A fashion show will be seen by Paramount picture patrons in Allan Dwan's production of "The Glimpses of the Moon," which is now being made at the company's Eastern studio.

In addition to the luxurious furs, gowns and wraps worn by the principal feminine characters, which are being played by Bebe Daniels, Nita Naldi and Rubye de Remer, the director has secured the services of a dozen manikins from two of the foremost dressmaking establishments in New York.

"Fighting Blood" Tieup Planned

F.B.O. Film Version of Witwer Stories Will Be Widely Advertised

H. C. WITWER'S "Fighting Blood" stories, which are now running in Collier's Magazine, will be issued shortly by G. P. Putnam's Sons Publishing Co. in book form and will carry a special jacket advertising the F.B.O. film version of these stories. This tie-up means that the five hundred Putnam dealers will give prominence to the F.B.O. series during their entire drive on this book.

In addition to the photoplay jacket "Fighting Blood" in book form will be illustrated by stills of "Fighting Blood" in picture form. The third of these stories, "Six-Second Smith," is now in production at the R-C Studios in Los Angeles, under the direction of Mal St. Clair. Eleven of the twelve stories have already been published in Collier's Magazine, which is also carrying on the same page with the story a full column F.B.O. ad, calling the readers' attention to the fact that these fascinating stories of sporting life will soon be shown on the screens of the leading theatres.

The book will be placed before the public in February, by which time it is expected that the pictures will be released.

"Fighting Blood" in pictures will remain close to the stories as written by Mr. Witwer. George O'Hara has the leading male role of "Gale Galen" and Clara Horton plays "Judy," his sweetheart and his inspiration to success. "Fighting Blood" is not a story of pugilism, but rather a heart-interest story of an American youth who wins an education by his cleverness and gameness in the prize ring.

"Woman of Bronze" Under Way

Actual Filming Starts on Photoplay With Clara Kimball Young as Star

ACTUAL filming has been started in Hollywood of "The Woman of Bronze," the stage play which will be picturized with Clara Kimball Young as the star. The photoplay is being produced by Harry Garson for release by Metro.

King Vidor, who recently directed Laurette Taylor in a Metro screen version of "Peg O' My Heart," has been engaged to serve in a similar capacity for Miss Young. An excellent supporting cast has already been engaged. In it are John Bowers, Katherine McGuire, Lloyd Whitlock, Edwin Stevens and Edward Kimball.

The role which Miss Young will portray is the one in which the noted stage actress, Margaret Anglin, appeared with marked success on Broadway.

"The Woman of Bronze" is the third Metro picture in which John Bowers has appeared this year. He enacted the title role in the Metro-SL photoplay, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," and also appeared opposite Viola Dana in "Calico and Romance," her most recently completed picture.

Katherine McGuire will appear in the role of a sculptor's model in "The Woman of Bronze." Edwin Stevens will play the part of the father of the sculptor's model. Edward Kimball, Miss Young's father in real life, enacts the part of "Papa" Bonelli, a lovable character in the story.

"The Woman of Bronze" will be photographed by William McConnell. Joseph Wright is the art director. It was translated by Paul Kester from the French novel by Henry Kistemacher and was adapted for the screen by Hope Loring and Louis Lighton.

Wisconsin Deal Closed on Lichtman Product

Last week, one deal was closed under the terms of which the Al Lichtman product will be handled in Wisconsin by the Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Wisconsin, beginning with "Thorns and Orange Blossoms."

This was done in order to secure a more intensive distribution for Preferred Pictures in that territory where, until the transaction was closed, the F. and R. Film Company of Minneapolis had taken care of distribution. This week a revision of the first contract was made in order to permit the Celebrated Players to take over the release of "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows," the first and second releases. The deal does not affect the distribution of Preferred Pictures in Minnesota, Upper Michigan and the Dakotas where F. and R. will continue to handle the pictures.

Havez to Write C. B. C. Comedy Scripts

WORD comes this week from Harry Cohn of the C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation, and producer of the comedy output for that company, of the engagement of Jean Havez to write and take active charge of comedy scripts for C.B.C.

The engagement of Mr. Havez, one of the best known comedy scenario writers in the industry, comes as the forerunner of an announcement by Mr. Cohn of augmenting to a large degree his comedy producing units and to add in the near future at least two more comedy units to that now engaged in the making of the popular Hallroom Boys Comedies.

Havez contributed the stories for the first series of the Buster Keaton comedies, and was co-author of some of Harold Lloyd's biggest successes, among these "Sailor-Made Man," "Grandma's Boy," and "Dr. Jack."

Additions Are Made To "Vanity Fair" Cast

Hugo Ballin is still adding to the big cast which he is assembling at the Goldwyn studios for his photoplay version of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," starring his wife, Mabel Ballin.

Adele Rowland, famous musical comedy star, has been signed for an important part. Doris Stone, an English musical comedy star, has also been engaged, as have Leo White, James Marcus and Otto Lederer. Other players engaged are Hobart Bosworth, George Walsh, Eleanor Boardman, Harrison Ford, Willard Louis, Earle Fox, Robert Mack, William Humphrey and Tempe Piggott.

Special Artist To Make "Adam's Rib" Stills

E. S. Curtis, artist-photographer, was specially commissioned by Cecil B. DeMille to secure a set of stills on the huge prehistoric forest set which is a feature of "Adam's Rib," Mr. DeMille's new Paramount picture. It was felt that Mr. Curtis' wide experience in limning the faces of prehistoric peoples would make him particularly apt at the reproduction in stills of the cavemen and cavewomen characters.

Publishers Plan "Lorna Doone" Campaign

A BIG CAMPAIGN in connection with Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone," a First National release, is being put on throughout the country by Milton Bradley Company, Publishers of Springfield, Mass. The Bradley firm is putting out a de luxe edition of Blackmore's "Lorna Doone," and is making bookstore displays wherever the First National picture is being shown. It is also putting out sinpes to go with the First National posters and is carrying on a letter campaign with schools and colleges.

This de luxe edition has an introduction by Tom Ince and on the cover is a portrait of Madge Bellamy under which is her signature. The Bradley people are distributing window cards which proclaim this as the Madge Bellamy edition.

Mary Pickford's "Tess" Warmly Praised

From both John Hamrick, of Seattle, and Jean Roth, of San Francisco, come expressions of the highest praise after previews of Mary Pickford's entirely new production of her "Tess of the Storm Country."

"We have previewed Mary Pickford's 'Tess of the Storm Country'" telegraphed Mr. Hamrick. "Naturally we were all anxious and wondering if it would come up to expectations. Today I will tell the whole world my expectations were tame in comparison with the realization. The picture is 100 per cent all the way and Miss Pickford has never equalled anything like this 'Tess of the Storm Country.'"

"Our entire staff, including Mr. and Mrs. Rothschild, prereviewed Mary Pickford's 'Tess of the Storm Country' last night," was the message from Jean Roth, "and throughout the entire ten reels the keenest interest was manifest, all uniting in declaring that in this new version of 'Tess' Miss Pickford perhaps gives the finest artistic portrayal of her entire career."

"Kentucky Derby" On B'way

Scenes Photographed From Actual Running of Derby Create Enthusiasm

"THE KENTUCKY DERBY," Universal's Jewel screen adaptation of Charles T. Dazey's celebrated stage melodrama, had its New York premiere during the past week at the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre. The premiere was slated for the Capitol theatre, but the earliest date for that theatre available was in January, and Universal refused to hold the picture after its release date, December 4.

"The Kentucky Derby" is one of the most unusual pictures on the screen in that it actually was photographed on the scenes recorded in the story. Laid in Louisville and Lexington, Ky., it deals with the famous Kentucky Derby, America's most noted turf classic. King Baggot, Universal director, actually took a large company of players and technicians from Los Angeles to Kentucky, where he spent many weeks, getting accurate scenes of the land of the thoroughbred, and, finally, a graphic record of the celebrated 1921 Derby, won by Morvich.

"The Kentucky Derby" was used by Universal as a starring vehicle for Reginald Denny. Since he was featured in "The Leather Pushers" he has jumped almost overnight into nation-wide prominence as a screen hero.

Those who visited the Broadway theatre were loud in their acclaim of the thrills in the Derby picture. By using the actual pictures of the Kentucky Derby as it was run last season, and by heightening them with stirring close-ups made by a battery of eight cameras stationed around the track, the suspense is almost unbelievable.

"The Kentucky Derby" is now ready for general release throughout the country. It has been shown in only a few key cities, notably Chicago and Detroit, where it is said to have been received with enthusiasm. Its success in the New York territory is said to be assured, due to the reception accorded the picture at its Broadway showing.

Supporting Denny were such players as Lillian Rich, Lionel Belmore, Gertrude Astor, Kingsley Benedict, Walter McGrail, Emmett King, Harry Carter and others.

Real Circus Background for New Fox Subjects

SHIRLEY OF THE CIRCUS," Shirley Mason's new production for William Fox, will present some genuine circus atmosphere. Advantage was taken by the Fox production officials of the presence of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus in the Pacific Coast cities recently.

Lillian Leitzel, the little wonder single - rope performer, spent much of her time with Miss Mason on the lot and helped to provide some real circus environment. "Eddie" Miller, chief rigger, superintended the building at the Fox studios of a reproduction of the "R. B. and B. & B." arena. John Patterson, chief animal trainer, and his assistant helped in the filming of the lion scenes. Other executives of the big circus assisted Director Rowland V. Lee in an advisory capacity.

Quite a few of the important scenes were filmed under the "big top" of the show itself.

Warner Pictures for N.Y. Strand

"Heroes of Street" to "Follow Beautiful and Damned" in Broadway House

FOR two consecutive weeks, two Warner Brothers productions will be shown at the Strand theatre, New York. "The Beautiful and Damned," with Marie Prevost, is booked for the week of December 10, and "Heroes of the Street," a Harry Rapf production, featuring Wesley Barry, will be shown the following week.

According to Harry M. Warner, this is the first time in the history of Broadway that two independent productions are to be shown for two consecutive weeks at the Strand theatre. To aid the Strand management, the Warner publicity department has planned an extensive publicity and advertising campaign for both productions.

"The Beautiful and Damned" is a picturization of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel of the same name. The story is declared to reveal with devastating satire a section of American society which has never before been recognized as an entity.

Olga Printzlau adapted the novel for the screen, and William A. Seiter directed the production under the direct supervision of Sam and Jack Warner. In the cast supporting Miss Prevost are Kenneth Harlan, Louise Fazenda, Harry Meyers, Tully Marshall, Walter Long, Clarence Burton, Emmett King, Cleo Ridgeley, Charles McHugh, George Kuwa and Parker McConnell.

"Heroes of the Street," featuring Wesley Barry, is said to be the greatest picture of the freckled youngster's career. The story is full of melodrama.

Prominent members of the supporting cast include Marie Prevost, Jack Mulhall, Wilfred Lucas, Aggie Herron, Al Walling, Philo McCullough, Phil Ford and Joe Butterworth. The story was written by Edmund Goulding and Mildred Considine. William A. Seiter directed the production.

"Over The Hill" Scores In Latin America

That "Over the Hill" has that essential element of universal appeal possessed only by the really great in photoplay art is attested by the enthusiastic reception accorded this William Fox masterpiece in Latin America.

Exhibited under the Spanish title of "Honor Thy Mother," "Over the Hill" has been crowding theatres everywhere since its opening, according to the Fox offices.

The following excerpts from a letter received from Mr. Alber to Rosenvald, manager for Fox Film Corporation in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, speaks volumes:

"Congratulations on the unprecedented success of "Over the Hill," which opened yesterday at the Republic theatre.

"It is in our opinion an absolutely perfect picture, . . . the impression left in the minds of the thousands of spectators was truly marvelous."

"Tracks" Approved for London Showing

"Tracks," the Playgoers feature, gives promise of repeating its big success in England, according to reports to Playgoers from its European representatives.

"Tracks" recentiy had its first London showing under the auspices of Phillips Films. The Film Renter and Moving Picture News, probably the most influential of British trade journals, said:

"This is a Western picture, with hard riding and quick shooting. It has an advantage which many pictures have not, of a good, holding story, and the acting is everywhere adequate to the situations."

The official censorship board of Great Britain has given the feature a "universal" rating, an assurance that "Tracks" is admirably adapted for showing before all classes and ages of the population, including women and children.

"Nanook" Is Commended by Educators

"Nanook of the North," Robert J. Flaherty's picture-drama of the real life of the Eskimos, inspires many voluntary testimonials from eminent educators, says Pathe. The following is quoted as representing a crystalized example of expressions from this general source. It is dated Nov. 25, at Fort Wayne, Ind., and is signed by Stanley Fink, Public School Principal:

"I am a public school principal in Pennsylvania. I am spending a week's vacation in this city and have seen 'Nanook of the North' at a local theatre. I wish to congratulate you on the most wonderful educational picture I have ever seen."

Century Comedies Receive Endorsement

The September and October Bulletins of the National Committee for Better Films endorse Century Comedies as follows:

In the October Bulletin "Peg o' the Movies" starring Baby Peggy, is mentioned as clever slapstick for young people. "Rookies," a Brownie dog picture. "Running Wild," a horse and donkey picture, featuring Queenie the horse and Maudie the mule, suitable for children.

Ibanez Aids In Filming Picture

Cosmopolitan Promises Lavish Production for "The Enemies of Women"

ALL the artistry, perfection of detail and lavishness of production which featured the creation of Cosmopolitan Productions' "When Knighthood Was in Flower," are said to be employed in the making of "The Enemies of Women," a Cosmopolitan picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's latest romance.

No stone is being left unturned to make of "The Eenemies of Women," a worthy successor of "Knighthood" and one of the most beautiful pictures ever made. It was for this reason that Cosmopolitan upset all tradition by sending an entire company to Europe on location. The company spent six weeks in Monte Carlo, Nice and Paris, where the author located his story.

The trip abroad brought the company into direct contact with Ibancz, and his assistance in the direction of many of the scenes taken abroad is considered invaluable. So enthusiastic did Ibanez become over the plans of production, that he arranged to have scenes taken in the Casino at Monte Carlo and on the terrace of the Garden. Ibanez also secured permission to take scenes of the Prince of Monaco's palace, and pointed out the most picturesque spots of the Rivera. The work on the "interiors" of the picture is being made on a most lavish scale it is said.

James Murray, fencing master of the New York Athletic Club and Columbia University, who supervised the fencing scenes in "Knighthood" is also supervising the direction of the dramatic duel scene in "The Enemies of Women."

In picturizing this famous story as a super special, Cosmopolitan has assembled a brilliant cast, directed by Alan Crosland. Featured are Lionel Barrymore, considered by many as America's leading character actor, and Alma Rubens, of "Humoresque" fame. These two famous players are supported by such prominent stars as Pedro de Cordoba, William "Buster" Collier, Jr., Gareth Hughes, Paul Panzer, W. H. Thompson, Gladys Hulette and Mario Majeroni.

Bray to Specialize Short Subjects

President of Bray Productions, Inc., Asserts One and Two Reelers Popular

"SHORT subjects are coming into their own," said J. R. Bray, President of Bray Productions, Inc., to a representative of Motion Picture News. It will be remembered that Bray was the patentee of the first methods used in animated cartoons and since this form of entertainment earned popularity, he has devoted his time to keeping up to date on improving them. It was Bray also, who originated methods for making animated drawings by which the operation of complicated machinery and movement of invisible things such as gases and electricity, were vizualized and explained.

Continuing to speak upon the subject, Bray also said:

"In trying to gauge the public taste, Bray Productions has figured that one-fourth comedy and three-fourths more substantial material should be about right. Consequently, our program for the coming year will consist of four releases. The Bray Magazine and Bray Nature Studies will be distributed in the State Rights market, while Bray comedies will be released through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

s "The Bray Magazine will be issued every two weeks—twenty-six numbers for the year. It will be devoted to the sort of subjects one might expect to find in a popular magazine, three or four subjects in each issue.

"I have every confidence in the popularity of short subjects," concluded the producer, and intend to evidence my belief in them by specializing upon such material as I believe is in demand."

Medicine Ideas Upset by "Dr. Jack"

James W. Dean, whose reviews of motion picture and acute analyses showing the special gifts displayed by famous screen favorites are regularly printed in leading newspapers all over the United States, devotes his attention to Harold Lloyd under the recently published head: "Lloyd, as 'Dr. Jack' Upsets Old Ideas of Medicine." The article says, in part:

"He prescribes a son's visit to brighten a jaded mother, excitement as tonic for a pampered girl, and uses bitter medicine only as a threat against boys who think they are too ill to go to school. The Lloyd theory, unlike the Coue system, works in an external way. The well make the ill believe that they are getting better day by day."

Dallas Advertises "The Prisoner of Zenda"

More than 4,000 lithographed sheets were posted in Dallas, Texas, in connection with the presentation at the Palace theatre there of the Rex Ingram production for Metro, "The Prisoner of Zenda." This unusual advertising campaign was further augmented by a proportionate amount of newspaper publicity, and it is the opinion of Dallas showmen that few productions—legitimate or photoplay—have ever received such complete city-wide heralding.

Illuminants and Methods for Lighting Motion Picture Studios

Wiring and Distribution Systems on Stages which Entail Great Flexibility

By F. S. Mills*

THE modern magic of the motion picture studio presents many angles of romance, but probably the most fascinating romance of all can be found in the electric lights. When the cameraman cries, "Light 'em up," and shafts of light come from the "spots," floods of light from the huge sun arcs, and the pale blue rays are sent out by the long Cooper-Hewitt tubes, it is no wonder that the casual visitor to the studio is amazed.

In the early days of the motion picture, very little artificial lighting was used. With mere sunlight no special effects such as are achieved in motion pictures to-day could be obtained; also it must be understood that on a clear day light values do not remain the same, thus it is necessary to use artificial light to standardize the light.

Old Sol has been cheated of part of his glory in the modern lighting systems now in use in the large motion picture producing plants. In the early days of the film industry, artificial lights were unheard of and the sun was the source of all photographic illumination. When cloudy weather came along, however, there had to be a suspension of activities. It was also impossible to get anything but flat, plain photography by the use of sunlight, hence special efforts were out of the question.

As the art became daily more complex, photographic novelties in the form of lighting effects were introduced. It also became possible, with the aid of lights, to defy the sun—to "shoot" in rainy or cloudy weather as well as on the brightest days; and at the present time, so practical and so thorough have become the systems of electrical illumination now in vogue, that hardly an interior scene is made without the aid of these powerful illuminating agencies.

At first the motion picture industry used natural daylight in the taking of pictures with the motion picture camera. This was followed by the use of a reflector of silver paper pasted on sections of wood about 3 feet by 4 feet, thus catching the sun and reflecting it back into the faces of the actors and actresses. The next advance in lighting was the use of a carbon arc. At present there are two forms of lighting used, one is the carbon arc and the other the mercury vapor unit. From the carbon arc there is developed what is termed the "high intensity arc," the latest development is the adoption of a 36-in. navy searchlight. In this, diffusing glass is used to get a deflection of 20° and 40° divergence. This form of lighting from the searchlight is the last step that has been taken in the motion picture industry.

We have been greatly handicapped in the use of the type "C" lamp owing to its lack of actinic ray. However, voltage manipulation, such as a 10 per cent rise in voltage, greatly increases its actinic value. Type "C" lamps have been used successfully for diffused illumination on gold picture frames and from practically one-half voltage up to and over 10 per cent normal voltage was registered by the camera. This was done by building a cove lighting system around three life size picture frames and showing the gradual increase of intensity on models within the frame, from practically no intensity to full intensity, and then fading out through the control of the voltage by rheostats on motor generator sets. This method was used in a picture of Miss Bebe Daniels directed by Mr. Franklin. Then under another condition, the 1,000-watt flood-lighting projectors have been successfully used on some scenes in the picture, "The Fighting Chance" directed by Chas. Maine.

Cooper-Hewitt tubes are used to secure average daylight lighting in studios which are completely darkened, but out in the West nearly all the stages are open with glass roofs, using white muslin diffusing cloth to cut down the bright intensity. They are now using, in addition, a black diffuser cloth to maintain certain average intensities throughout the scenes. This "darkening-down" with black diffusing cloth is done owing to the fact that a sequence may be started in the forenoon and run past daylight value about four o'clock in the afternoon during summer months, or light values may change through cloudy condition of the sky which may change the character of the scene.

A development which has recently been used is an overhead dome using carbon arc in a metal lined trough in a cove. This has been used in semi-close-ups and close-ups for getting perfect diffusion overhead and down the face for elimination of certain shadows. These domes and other direct lighting domes are also used where wall sets are built and no provision is made for the placing of carbon arcs along the side of the room.

In the use of table lamps, stand lamps, etc., these are always equipped with a carbon arc. (See Figure 1.) Formerly they have been using the plain

Synopsis

THE author sets forth the use of various illuminants in the field of the moving picture industry; the high intensity arc lamp for special effects, the Cooper-Hewitt mercury vapor lamp for general actinic lighting, and the high wattage Mazda C lamp for diffused illumination.

Mention is made of the wiring and distribution system on stages which entails great flexibility in order to carry the variable load. On "location" the power is produced by means of very large motor generator sets mounted on portable trucks.

Numerous illustrations of interior and exterior views of the studio in action and night lighting on "location" are shown, as well as various types of lamps used.

hand feed arc, but an automatic arc was developed to make and break by opening and closing of switch of the "set." Considerable trouble was experienced with this carbon, as it often smoked during the taking of a scene. To overcome this objection a special carbon was used. In the filming of any scenes where an actor lights a cigarette or cigar, it is always done by a little baby arc to get effect of the light on his face. The wires run down his sleeve to the floor, and is always "struck" by the actor himself, using what is called the pencil carbon with a consumption of 1,000 watts or 10 amperes. In the filming of fireplaces, in addition to the gas logs with the gas burning, carbon arcs are placed in the back so as to get the fire effect into the face or into the room. Ordinarily the flame would not "pick up" or photograph. In addition to this development, there have also been designed what are called "suspended floor lighting units" for close-ups and semi-close-ups to overcome certain "necklace" lines on the faces of people taking part in the picture.

The intensity of illumination used on sets varies considerably with the action, the character of the set itself, wall papers used and furniture. There are seldom two sets of any size lighted the same, special study being given to where the natural source of light would be, and then the units placed to follow the natural shadows which would be secured from a room lighted in various manners, such as with brackets, overhead fixtures or other methods of lighting. In camera work, particular care is taken to prevent light or shadow across the nose. In lighting of actors and actresses, consideration is always given to tests of the "make up," which on some complexions acts different than on others. There are many grades of powder used. For example, some people of a rugged complexion have blood vessels close to the surface of the skin and these must be eliminated by heavier powders. Red is never used in the make up except on the lips. Eyebrows and eyelashes are darkened with Mascaro. It has always been attempted to bead the eyelash with little balls of Mascaro at the end which directs shadows over and under the eye.

Spots of 70 amperes over sets are always used for back lighting of the characters, such as shown in Figure 2. This is done to make the character stand out from the wall, otherwise what is termed "flat light" would be secured on the screen, and in this flat lighting there is no division made between the scene and the people themselves in action. This is a very difficult way of lighting, owing to the fact that these spots which are used in large numbers in sets, are hand fed and quite often are used to spot the actors and actresses in a set during action. When spots are used in sets of this character, one must be very careful that the camera is not picking up the foreground or floor of the room. If so, a frost paper is used in combination with the spot for breaking up the circles caused by the spot on the floor. This is also used to soften one side of the lighting of the room by the use of the spot in combination with frosted paper in frost frames.

Fig. 5.—Large transformers used for stage lighting.

Considerable study is also given to the use of these spots on top of sets for "raking" of walls, and also are placed in such a position as to concentrate the full value of their light on brackets, silk shades, to have them stand out from the wall and make them look as though they were lighted.

Owing to the fact that the round frosted lamps used in brackets on walls will not photograph, and "spots" are used to light the silk shade and to direct a ring of light directly over them on a statue, vase or table, as though the lighting were secured from the bracket directly over such article. This form of illumination makes the composition more complete and stops any possibility of flat lighting.

In all sets usually employed, the lighting is secured from a bank of carbon arcs used in reflecting hoods mounted on a stand, as shown in Figure 3. These arcs are equipped with a diffusing glass ribbed, having a very fine stippled finish, as it is very dangerous to use an open arc, because of its effects upon the eyes of the players. This glass is used on lighting units to secure the hard side of the illumination. A method has been devised of building a box frame around both of the lighting hoods and using a tracing paper. See Figure 4. This arrangement softens down the quantity of intensity and gives more character to two sides of a set. This lighting is very technical and is generally followed through with the lighting specialists on a set in combination with the camera man and director to secure the correct direction of action and placing of shadows.

In the use of both the 70 ampere spot and the broad side unit as shown in Figure 3, there were designed a series of louvres, like shutters, made of aluminum. These louvres or shutters are placed on approximately two-inch centers down the length of the box frame as shown in Figure 4, inside of the curtain and so controlled on tracks that by the operation of one lever all of these fins will open or close simultaneously. In combination with the shutter, a diffusing cloth is used to stop any shadows caused by the irregular opening or closing of these shutters. A similar type of unit has been designed for the use of the 36-inch navy searchlights, from which are secured lighting effects.

Great use is found for this diffusing cloth and shutter unit where the lighting is from alternating current. Most motion picture cameras are equipped with an automatic "fadeout," but owing to the extreme danger of synchronizing the cranking with the cycles of the alternating current, the automatic "fadeout" is seldom used on the camera when alternating current service is employed. Therefore, by the use of these special shutters, a complete set can be faded in and out of the picture by opening and closing these shutters, which accomplishes the same thing as the automatic "fadeout" on the camera, and without the danger of synchronization with the camera.

Trouble has been frequently experienced due to the fact that on long scenes the camera will start normal cranking, which is 14-16, and increase or decrease the speed from this normal value, and by so doing cause flickers to appear in the lighting of the picture itself. The camera has synchronized with the alternating current, which is a problem that has been faced by the motion picture producers in the use of alternating current.

One of the largest motion picture producers to-day is using very successfully alternating current, 50 cycles, having no investment in power apparatus other than one 3-unit motor generator set, and three units for supplying direct current to the high intensity arcs. In this case the power company delivers service at 2,300 volts and installs the necessary capacity in transformers, Figure 5, 250 kw., for stage lighting. A very heavy load is built up quickly in this form of illumination. Every unit used averages 70 amperes, and when a carbon arc first strikes, the current is excessive but quickly settles back to its rated value.

Great study has been given to the wiring and distribution system on stages owing to the heavy load. Where a number of stages are used in one plant for the making of motion pictures, the total capacity may be on any one stage at any one time. This entails great flexibility and a system where provision must be made for wiring, distribution and carrying of a load at one point of the total capacity of the plant. See Figure 6. There have been sets in one picture alone where total connected load has been over 14,000 amperes of carbon arcs alone. There is no consideration given the overloading of any apparatus up to the danger point, and it is not unusual at times to see the insulating compound running out of cables and oil bubbling out of transformers. Many directors are not posted technically as to the dangers of a continuous load and are at times liable to burn the lights where unless carefully watched, may cause serious breakdowns and tie up a complete studio.

The most difficult problems faced in the matter of lighting is on "locations." See Figure 7. Very often it is necessary to build high tension transmission lines, taking service from a power company at 15,000 volts, put up a complete line for a number of miles, setting a bank of transformers and then stepping down to the voltage of the lighting equipment. It has been found where these large sets are built on "location" and impractical to build transmission lines, the studios have been forced to construct very large portable motor generator sets mounted on trucks, as shown in Figure 8. The expense alone of the truck was in excess of $30,000. In this case a marine type of gas engine is used, carrying two submarine type generators. All of this apparatus is mounted on a 7½-ton White truck especially geared for mountains, as locations are picked by directors without any consideration for transportation or how power can be secured. When necessary to build sets and locate them in remote regions, these plants must be sent.

Fig. 8.—Portable truck carrying motor generator sets

In a recent production it was not feasible to take the snow scenes in or near Southern California, due to the fact that the picture was written around the Canadian Northwest where snow and blizzards were necessary. All these scenes and sets were constructed at Truckee, Calif., where the complete company stayed for six weeks. In this case the settings were placed three and one-half miles from the nearest power line, and it was necessary to build a 2,300-volt line and set transformers. It was found necessary to shut down some of the buildings in Truckee, Calif., in order to get the necessary power load to take the pictures. This transmission line was built along a roadway without a pole line. The insulators and pins were therefore installed on trees heavily covered with snow. During this picture and their night work, much time was lost owing to heavy snow fall where it was necessary to stop work and dig the snow from around the sets.

One of the most notable lighting achievements accomplished during the past year was the night lighting of the big Siamese exterior setting which was built at Balboa, Calif., for some of the spectacular scenes in Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Fools Paradise." Without a doubt this was one of the biggest motion picture illuminating propositions ever undertaken. The lighting equipment required to properly illuminate that set, if out in a continuous line, would extend for a quarter of a mile.

The cost of lighting scenes varies according to the size of the set and the consequent number of lights used. For unusually large settings, requiring a great deal of light, the cost might range from twelve to fifteen dollars an hour for lights.

Of course, the motion picture industry is still comparatively new, and we are still in the experimental stage so far as lighting is concerned. Not only in the studios, but in the movie theatres, there is considerable room for improvement. A spectator entering the largest of our cinema palaces is generally plunged from bright daylight into murky darkness; he passes through the reverse experience when he leaves the theatre, and the eyes suffer a consequent strain, as the pupil does not have time to adjust itself to the sudden change.

Elliott Now Director of Feaster Mfg. Co.

Announcement has been made that Frederick H. Elliott, who organized the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and served as its Executive Secretary for over six years, has been elected a member of the board of directors and executive committee of the Feaster Manufacturing Company and has assumed his new duties at the general offices of the company, 16 West 46th street.

The Feaster Manufacturing Company is a $750,000 corporation which manufactures the Feaster no-rewind machine for attaching to the standard makes of projection machines and which eliminates rewinding, thereby prolonging the life of the film and is considered very essential from the viewpoint of fire protection.

Mr. Elliott brings to this corporation a wide experience and knowledge of the motion picture industry, gained from his many years of service with the industry's national organization, which should prove invaluable to his associates in the Feaster Company. This is particularly true in connection with the fire prevention work of the National Association, which Mr. Elliott directed and which resulted in the adoption of many precautionary measures and policies affecting the studios, exchanges, laboratories and motion picture theatres and with a resultant protection to the lives of thousands of employes in the various branches of the industry.

Golden Gate Theatre, San Francisco, Most Thoroughly Equipped

THE latest addition to the Junior Orpheum Circuit, San Francisco, was made through the beautiful Golden Gate theatre.

The Golden Gate is, it is claimed, one of the most perfect playhouses in America. With reference to equipment and furnishings, it is without doubt, the theatrical achievement of the present day. Ideas born of years of study by experts in theatrical architecture have been combined in making this theatre perfect. The theatre is known as the "$1,500,000 motion picture and vaudeville house."

Spacious lobbies, finished in Polychrome terra cotta and art marble are a feature. Entrance to the balcony is provided by elevator service. Well-appointed rest rooms, retiring and smoking rooms are provided.

The mezzanine promenade, between the main floor and the balcony, is one of the most elaborate appointments of which any theatre can boast. It is decorated in a gold damask effect and is rich in draperies and furnishings.

The seating capacity is over 3,000, including the boxes. The spacious simplicity of the great auditorium, with its barrel shaped opera chairs and wide aisles, is most inviting. In an atmosphere of pure air, supplied by the most modern ventilating and sanitary equipments, a patron may enjoy relaxation and the highest form of vaudeville and motion picture entertainment.

The performer also comes in for a mighty share of the most improved ideas in theatre construction. The many dressing rooms are airy and attractively furnished. On each floor of the dressing rooms are tubs and shower baths. The performers may reach their different floors by an elevator which has been installed for their special benefit.

One feature which is sure to attract attention is the concealment of fire escapes. They were installed by the architect between the wall of the theatre and the exterior facade wall. The lines of the fire escapes are indicated on the exterior of the facade wall.

Another feature is that people in the back rows of seats in the lower part of the house have no gallery floor above them. The structure there has been cut away—or rather none has been built in. The back row patrons downstairs may look up to the mezzanine floor or from this latter point they may be looked down upon.

A double illuminating system is used, one for the pictures and the other for the vaudeville. When the screen is in use, the soft light from the blue dome gives a decidedly agreeable effect. Brilliant lights are added as may be desired at other times and in all variations of degree, color and tone. The stage is said to be the most completely equipped of all that are in vaudeville use. At the fifty-foot opening are three curtains, the main drape being of red silk velour. The asbestos curtain is operated in the usual way, but in case of fire on the stage, when no attendant was near, it would be dropped by the melting of a fusible link. Peter Clark of New York has installed his newly devised counterweight system of handling scenery and changing to the motion picture screen; all the work being done by one man.—Gross.

Golden Gate theatre, San Francisco, Cal., presents an exceptionally striking appearance. Note the unusual and artistic design used to conceal the fire escapes on the right side of the building

Delavan, Wisconsin, Theatre Has New Organ

Mr. F. Olson, owner of the Pastime theatre at Delavan has placed an order through Mr. K. G. Kurtz, sales manager for the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, for a fully equipped Barton orchestral organ. This means that Mr. Olson will have one of the new model Bartons which are finding universal enthusiasm and which will unquestionably meet with approval of the theatregoers at Delavan.

Shea's Hippodrome Reopens

Shea's Hippodrome, City Hall Square, Toronto, reopened Saturday, November 25, as the leading theatre of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation chain throughout Canada with "The Young Rajah." The entire staff of the Regent theatre, Toronto, formerly the head theatre of the corporation, was moved over to the Hippodrome, the Regent being closed the night before for an indefinite period. Clarence Robson, at the Regent for three years, took over the "Hip" as manager, while Jack Arthur transferred to the new headquarters as musical supervisor. The Regent concert orchestra was increased from 22 to 30 pieces in the change-over, making it the largest permanent theatre orchestra in the Dominion, it is stated.

The Hippodrome had been dark for a week during which time marvelous changes had been made in the furnishings.—Gladish.

Plans for same are under way and the estimated cost is to be $150,000. The theatre is being backed by local interests allied with the Liberty theatre at Herkimer, N. Y. C. H. ## A Reminder

It has just occurred to the editor that it would be a good idea to call to attention the matter of projection screens as they play such an important part in securing the best projection for the theatre. Authentically, this subject is probably very little known to the average person in this industry as so many claims are made for each type of screen that is put on the market as to render an accurate decision on the merits of the various types impossible.

However, regardless of the reports circulating from various sources it is safe to say that there is no one type of screen that best fulfills the requirements of all theatres. In other words, it is necessary to make an intelligent study and selection of the type of screen for each theatre if the greatest efficiency in projection is to be had.

Several articles have appeared in the Technical Department of the News explaining in detail the characteristics embodied in the various types of screens. A careful study of those articles would enable the projectionist to be reasonably certain that he can make the correct selection for any particular house. It is safe to venture the statement that there are a great many screens used in the houses of the projectionists who read this article that are ill-fitted for the duty they perform. Take for example, the long narrow house.

Reflector Type

We will first go on the assumption that this house has all the seats on the main floor with no balcony. It is quite likely in this case, that the best projection efficiency may be obtained through the use of the reflector type of screen, i.e., a screen that acts more or less in the fashion of a mirror in that it throws the light back in relatively a small spread, concentrating in the area where it is most useful instead of allowing a large portion of the light projected to the screen to be disbursed to extreme angles on the side where it is not of any value in observing the picture from the sides of the house. The various types of reflector screens can be used for this type of house.

The question often arises as to the advisability of using the Crystal Beaded screen. It is in this long narrow theatre that this screen is best fitted providing the angle of projection is extremely small. A peculiar characteristic of the Crystal Beaded screen is that it reflects the maximum light directly back along the line that it is projected to the screen. In other words, instead of acting like a mirror where when light falling above on the mirror is reflected off at the bottom at an equal angle, in the case of this screen, the light hitting the screen at an angle from the top is reflected directly back up along that same beam of light. It is for this reason that the Crystal Beaded screen is not a good one to be installed where the angle of projection is very great, as the picture will then appear to be brightest from the projection room rather than from the orchestra floor. However, where the conditions are favorable for the installation of the Crystal Beaded screen, it is a very good type of screen to use.

Tilting the Screen

It is often advantageous in many instances where the angle of projection is large and a reflector type of screen is used, to tilt the bottom of the screen slightly in towards the audience so that the maximum intensity of light will be reflected to the center of the seating arrangement in the auditorium rather than down to the few front rows of seats. Probably the best way to determine the degree the screen should be tilted is by the cut-and-try method.

Now, when we come to the matter of a house which is relatively wide in comparison with its length and observers sitting in the front side seats are forced to look on the screen from an extreme angle, it will be found best to use the screen with highly diffusing characteristics, that is to say, a screen that will spread the light out over a large angle and, in so doing, appear to be well illuminated from all points of vision. In using this type of screen in the relatively wide house, it insures the audience sitting in the seats which give a sharp angle of vision to the screen, a relatively well lighted picture. In case a reflector type screen is installed in a house of this type, the audience in the front side seats will observe a picture which is many times less in illumination than when observed from the center of the house. This proves a very unsatisfactory arrangement because people who come in and observe how well lighted the picture is in the center of the house and are forced to take their seats at the extreme sides are dissatisfied with the results.

It takes a higher intensity of illumination falling on the screen to secure a picture of the desired brightness with the diffusing type screen than in the case where a reflector type of screen is used. Though this factor should not enter into consideration in any way in the case of the wide house as it is absolutely essential that every seat in the house allow the observer to see a well lighted picture.

Probably the most common fault now in practice in the small theatre is the use of a screen with a very low reflecting characteristic, that is to say, instead of employing a good quality of screen an ordinary canvas is used or, if a reflector type of screen is employed, it has been installed for such a long period that its efficiency in reflecting the light has been cut down two or three times.

To bring forcibly to attention the efficiency in screens, it is a good idea to secure a small sample of the type of screen that is well suited for your house and place it in a position so that a comparison can be made with the screen that is being employed. It is safe to say that the difference will be astonishing in a relatively large percentage of cases. The matter of a new screen does not involve a tremendous investment, yet it does improve the illumination of the picture in many instances as much as one or two hundred per cent.

Importance of Cleaning

Another factor in keeping an efficient screen in the theatre is the matter of cleaning their reflecting surfaces. In the average case it is best to write directly to the company that manufactures the screen for recommendations for cleaning as there have been a great many cases where attempts were made to clean the surfaces with the result that the screen was spoiled entirely. Many of the manufacturers have printed instructions for this process.

All Theaters

Need the Major System of Lighting Control

For the first time a system of lighting control has been worked out to handle adequately the lights for performances, entertainments and all manner of stage expositions. The Major System, of sectional unit construction, and containing the most flexible and simplest method of grouping controls, is capable of fulfilling every lighting control need in the smallest picture show as well as in the largest and most luxuriously equipped theatre. Its cost is below that of inferior equipment, and the safety factors which it affords make it unquestionably the selection of far-seeing exhibitors.

The story is fully told in the Major Book, "The Control of Lighting in Theaters," sent on request.

These few general remarks which have been made concerning projection screens have not gone into the subject in any great detail but have carried suggestions on the main features in keeping an efficient reflecting surface for the picture. It is hoped that these remarks will call the attention of the projectionists to that particular phase of their theatre where undoubtedly the opportunity for improvement lies.

Again the Slide

Dear Editor:

Enclosed please find my application for membership in the League. I have had the intention of joining for some time but am just now doing it. You will note that I am in Macon at present attending school. I have been in the movie game for some time and expect to work some more real soon. During this time I have made many observations and among these that the film conditions and service today is much better than a few years ago, due to your good organization.

I am not a "head projectionist" at present but hope to be some time. Since I am in Macon, I wish to say that the picture presentations at the four theatres here are fine.

Please send me instructions as to how to get a slide made showing my membership button in the League.

Enclosed you will find money for button and please send me some labels.

Dear Editor:

As we are having quite a bit of trouble with the film we receive from our exchange, have decided that it would be best to join the League. Last week we received a film that was in such bad condition that we could not run it at all, due to bad patches, torn sprocket holes and misframes.

Will send more news later.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sir:

I wrote some time ago for some shipping blanks but never received them so please rush me some as soon as you can. And if you have a membership pin would you mind shipping that to me as soon as possible as I have been getting some very bad films.

Dear Editor:

I am sending in my application for membership in the League, also 25c. for membership button. I have been a projectionist for some time and have always intended to join the League. But as the life of a student who is in the game at night to pay his way thru school is fairly well taken up I have not done so sooner. I am 18 years old and have charge of my projection room here. It is Simplex-Mazda equipped.

Thanking you in advance,
Sincerely,

Dear Friend Editor:

Please enter me as a member of the League. Have been slow about getting in but always read your department and think it is a very good thing. Am enclosing twenty-five cents for the button and would also like some labels. If there is any charge for the latter let me know and I will send at once.

Yours for the N. A. M. L.,

Good Results

The Editor:

Please send me a membership button as I wish to become a member of the League. I have noticed a marked decrease in the number of punch marks in films in the last few months and I am sure the N. A. M. L. is very largely responsible for this. Many of the films here are not punched but scratched with a big X as large as the frame, these look even worse than the punches.

Will you please send me full information on how to join the League. I have been reading of it in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for some time and I think it is a fine thing for projectionists. ## Famous Players Canadian Completes Chain

A significant statement at the annual general meeting of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, held at Toronto, Ontario, on November 9, 1922, was that the company had completed its chain of large moving picture theatres in Canada by the acquiring of Shea's Hippodrome, the large downtown house in Toronto, which is to be formally taken over by the corporation on November 25, it was announced.

Negotiations for this theatre, which seats upwards of 3,000 persons, had extended over a period of two years, it was stated. It was reported at the meeting that the proposal to take over the chain of theatres under the control of Allen Theatres, Limited, Toronto, had definitely lapsed. The corporation's building programme was now complete, it was stated, with no outstanding commitments to be developed or relinquished.

The election of directors to the board of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, had resulted in the selection of S. R. Kent of New York, general manager of distribution for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to succeed W. C. Pitfield of Montreal.

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

On the Goldwyn Lot

Frank Urson, director for Marshall Neilan, arrived today from England after making scenes for "Tess of the D'Ubervilles."

Rupert Hughes is beginning the filming of "Souls for Sale," December 6, and will later go to Palm Springs for two weeks exterior shooting. In the cast are Richard Dix, impersonating the director; Frank Mayo, leading man; Barbara Lamarr, vampire; Mae Busch, the star. This is Hughes' story of film life.

Hughes' production, "Bitterness of Sweet," has been re-titled, "Look Your Best."

Hobart Bosworth has been added to the cast of "Vanity Fair."

Patsy Ruth Miller has been made the official star of the United Commercial Travelers, Los Angeles Council, No. 82. This Goldwyn ingenue will be guest of honor at a dance to given by the council on December 8.

Christie Comedy Bits

Al Christie, with a troupe of 15, has gone to Honolulu to make two subjects, accompanied by Henry Murdock, Dorothy Devore, Babe London and others.

Henry Murdock, who has been playing comedy roles in Christie pictures for two years, will be seen opposite Dorothy Devore in forthcoming "Hazel from Hollywood," and will then be featured himself, according to Al Christie's recent announcement.

East and West With Fox

Dustin Farnum, under the direction of Colin Campbell, is beginning "The Buster," with Doris Pawn opposite. The cast includes William Patterson White, Jack Strumwasser, A. McDonald, Pewee Holmes, Lucile Hutton.

Last week Tom Mix went over a cliff on a stage coach that turned over three times, fell with a pony over a precipice and rode pony on a thirty-foot jump for scenes in "The Hostage," and was not hurt. On Saturday Mix had serum injected for rheumatism, when the needle penetrated a vein and he is now laid up for two weeks.

Ben Lyons, who soon will be seen in a Broadway stage play, portrays the leading male role in the forthcoming Fox production, "Penzie," in which Mary Carr plays the featured role. The picture is an adaptation of Florence Bingham Livingston's novel, "The Custard Cup."

Fox announces that production on "Man's Size," the William McLeod Raine story, has been started at the Hollywood studios with William Russell in the starring role. The scenario adaptation has been prepared by Joseph F. Poland and Howard M. Mitchell will direct. In the cast are Alma Bennett, Stanton Heck, Charles K. P. French, James Gordon and Carl Stockdale.

John Gilbert, who recently returned to Hollywood after spending a vacation in New York, where, incidentally, he signed a new contract to be starred in a series of productions for William Fox, has started work on his forthcoming starring vehicle, "Truxton King," from a novel by George Barr McCutcheon. The picture will be directed by Jerome Storm.

George Owen Baxter's novel, "Three Who Paid," will be brought to the screen in the near future with Dustin Farnum in the leading role, according to announcement by William Fox. Colin Campbell will direct.

Here and There

William Steiner will arrive in Los Angeles next week. A second series starring Neal Hart is under way under William Steiner Productions banner, at Universal City. Work upon the first is now under way.

At the Ben Wilson studio "The Devil's Dooryard," by W. C. Tuttle, under the direction of Lewis King, has been put into production, starring William Fairbanks. In the supporting cast are Ena Gregory, James Gerard, Gearry Odell, Robert McKinsie, William White, James Welch and Will McGaugh.

Mark Goldain is directing Monte Banks in a comedy entitled, "Six A. M.," with a cast including Ena Gregory, Leo White, Margaret Cullison, Bud Ross, and Marjory Warfield. The comedy will have a big theatre fire spectacle.

The Hamilton White company has completed the first Louise Fazenda picture titled, "The Pest of the Storm Country," under the direction of Robert Kerr, in which Harry Gribbon plays opposite.

Claire Windsor will play the role of Countess Helga, Irving Cummings the role of Bernenstein, Nigel De Brullier the role of Herbert, servant to the King; Josephine Crowell, the mother role, and James Marcus as the Innkeeper in "Rupert of Hentzau" for Selznick.

The Selznick subject made under the title of "A Dollar Down," has been changed to "Modern Matrimony."

Edward J. Montagne, associate editor of Selznick Pictures, has been resigned for another year by Myron Selznick.

Reginald Barker will next produce "The Law Bringer," by G. B. Lancaster, and is going to Alberta for snow scenes. Barker will make "The Valley of Content" later.

It is reported that John Stahl is on his way to make "Money, Love and the Woman."

Tom Forman has finished "Are You a Failure?" and will next film "The Girl Who Came Back," from the play by Charles E. Blainey and Samuel Ruskin Golding. The continuity is being prepared by Evelyn Campbell.

In production are "Refuse," starring Katherine McDonald, being directed by Victor Schertzinger, and the all-star production of "Poor Men's Wives," under the direction of L. J. Gasnier. In the Roman spectacle scenes, many of the Selig zoo animals were used by Gasnier, this week.

With four companies engaged in active production at work, Thomas H. Ince has resumed production work after four months' inactivity with a drama of modern American life, said to carry an unusually powerful story, which was written by Bradley King. May McAvoy is being starred in the picture and is supported by a fine cast headed by Lloyd Hughes. Other members of the cast are James Corrigan, Casson Ferguson, Eric Mayne, Louise Lester, Brinsley Shaw, George Larkin, Eugenie Besserer, Jane Miller, Gus Leonard and "Charlie" the monkey. John Griffith Wray is directing.

Camera work has just been completed on the first of the Leah Baird special productions which has been titled, "When Civilization Fails." Included in the cast with Miss Baird are Tom Santchi, Walter McGrail, Richard Tucker, Alec B. Francis, Bobby Bolder and Ruth Mitchell. The atmosphere of the picture, which was directed by Wallace Worsley, was acquired on a trip made by the Baird company to South American waters and along the coast of Lower California.

Gene Stratton Porter's personally supervised production of her novel, "Michael O'Halloran," has been completed under the direction of James Leo Meehan. True Boardman, a youngster of fourteen, plays the title role, other members of the cast including Irene Rich, Josie Sedgwick, Claire McDowell, Charles Clary, William Boyd and Iva Schumaker.

Increasing activity on the lot at the Thomas H. Ince studios has necessitated the appointment of another assistant production manager. Charles T. Boulware, former general manager and ringmaster of Howe's Greater London Circus, has transferred his activities from the sawdust ring to the Ince lot where he will assist in oiling the production wheels for the numerous companies now at work.

Adrian, the nineteen-year-old designer who arrived in New York from Paris two months ago to design a number of the costumes for the new edition of the Music Box Revue, has been engaged by Arthur F. Friend, head of the Distinctive Pictures Corporation, to design the costumes for the fourth episode of "Backbone," the all-star production which Edward Sloman is now directing for that company.

Gasnier has signed Betty Francisco to appear in "Poor Men's Wives," for Preferred Pictures. This rounds out the cast which now includes Richard Tucker, Barbara La Marr, Zasu Pitts, David Butler and Miss Francisco. The story was written by Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston.

Ben Carre, Pyramid's art director, recently left New York on a several weeks' vacation to the coast. He returned to New York several days ago and immediately began work on a new Pyramid production entitled, "Wife in Name Only," to be directed by George Terwilliger at this company's Long Island studio. The story is the first of the Bertha M. Clay romances to reach the screen.

One of the important topics under discussion in Los Angeles by Al Lichtman and B. P. Schulberg is the production of "The Broken Wing," the stage play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard which Schulberg bought last week. The aeroplane crash which represents the high light of the play will be reproduced on the screen in an elaborate manner.

Clark Robinson is engaged in designing the sets for "Backbone" now being made in New York by Distinctive Pictures Corporation.

Rowland V. Lee has finished actual filming, which extended over a period of two months, of Booth Tarkington's "Alice Adams," in which Florence Vidor is starred. Cutting and titling are proceeding under Lee's direction.

From Los Angeles comes the news that Morris R. Schlank, head of the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., has added three additional stars' names to his list. They are Hobart Bosworth, Grace Darmond and little Arthur Trimble.

Maurice Tourneur announces that Anna Q. Nilsson and Milton Sills will enact the leading roles in his forthcoming picturization of "The Isle of Dead Ships" for First National release.

A simple ceremony marked the formal dedication of the new Anchor building at 1442 Beachwood drive, Hollywood, Cal., Saturday, November 25th, a few hours prior to Morris R. Schlank's trip eastward.

Warner Baxter has been placed under long term co-starring contract for F. B. O. pictures.

The great episode of fording the river, to which James Cruze, who is making "The Covered Wagon" for Paramount in Nevada and Utah, had looked forward with more or less apprehension, was successfully accomplished at the location 85 miles from Milford last week. The feat of the men who braved the dangers of the Oregon trail in '48 was duplicated in the filming of these scenes.

Hannelore, considered by many one of the greatest dancers in Europe and who scored an unqualified success when she made her American debut recently in a recital at the Vanderbilt theatre, has been engaged by Cosmopolitan Productions to appear in "The Enemies of Women," a picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's latest story, now being made under the direction of Alan Crosland.

One of the biggest interior scenes taken since "Foolish Wives" was made by George Archainbaud for "Flesh" and consisted of interior Parisian residence with dining halls and ball room. Since "Flesh" is completed director Archainbaud returns to Selznick to direct "Common Law."

STRIPS OF CELLULOID

A SERIES of pictures on strips of celluloid—that's all a producer has to show for the fortune he expends on each production. The work of months, the brains of his technical staff, the skill and artistry of writer, director, player, and cinematographer—all these are concentrated eventually on a few reels of negative film. Small wonder then that producers want this negative developed and safeguarded with more than ordinary care.

THAT'S why some of the industry's biggest producers depend upon the camera-to-screen service of STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES. Experience has taught them that our plant with its smooth-working organization is all a laboratory should be. Their negative itself not only is safe, but none of the artistry or effort it expresses is lost in developing or printing. They have learned that Standard Prints look better, wear longer, and save them money.

FOREWORD

PARAMOUNT herewith makes its regular semi-annual announcement of its product—definitely fixed and set for release in the coming six months.

The task has been a tremendous one of bettering the picture values and of topping the box-office power of Paramount's first half-year's releases, the "Famous 41"—such pictures as "Manslaughter," "Blood and Sand," "The Old Homestead," "To Have and To Hold," "The Young Rajah," "Nice People," "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," "Kick In,"—to mention only a few of Paramount's big releases of the past few months.

I sincerely feel, however, that this task has been accomplished. I believe that the new pictures herein described will be found of even greater money-making proportions for exhibitors than the best of the "Famous 41."

The selection of stories, the choosing of strong casts, the assignments of famous directors, the elaborate details of luxurious production, the popularity of Paramount stars—all has been combined with one thought in mind—to make the finest pictures the screen can produce. Not art for art's sake alone, but box-office value as well.

Certain it is that there has been no effort or money spared to make these "Super 39," the greatest pictures Paramount has ever released.

Adolph Zukor

I Pledge—

SIX months ago we issued the Paramount Booklet. In that Booklet we listed forty-one pictures—the most sweeping promise ever made to the exhibitors of America.

In the front of the book, nailed down in black and white, I pledged my word that this group of forty-one Paramount Pictures would be immeasurably better than any like number of pictures ever produced before.

The performance of that pledge—its performance to the last letter—is recorded in the box-office of every theatre that has played or is playing the "Famous 41."

But we cannot rest there—this swiftly moving business will not let us. So I make this new pledge:

Just as this "Famous 41" outstripped all previous records so this second group of Paramount Pictures will be better than the first—better collectively, better individually.

And, just as I kept my last pledge, so I know I will keep this pledge, too; for back of me, alert, untiring, resourceful, is the great Production Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, better organized than ever before, functioning like a machine and manned by the greatest organization of picture producers ever grouped in one company.

Each member of this organization—directors, writers, stars, leading players, executives, studio employees—is keenly alive to the importance and magnitude of our task. Each has pledged me his unswerving support and loyalty, and each one knows, as I know, that with "Paramount's "Super 39" we shall exceed our promise in this, our greatest work and greatest opportunity.

WITH A CAST INCLUDING
ALL THE STARS ON THIS PAGE AND OTHERS

Paramount is making this story—a comedy-drama about a girl who tried to get into the movies, but didn't—with a cast that when listed will be a duplicate of the top sheets of the Lasky Studio payroll.

Angela, the heroine, is the counterpart of a million American girls, and she goes to Hollywood to try to get into pictures. There is melodrama, love, mystery, humor.

She leads a life that a million girls will envy, that will make every motion picture patron laugh and thrill.

There have been hundreds of successful plots laid in New York, but not one in Hollywood. And Hollywood is the most interesting city in the world.

This production shows "everything and everybody."

The leading characters will be prominent. But the supporting cast will be so important and so large that no theatre on earth will have enough electric lights to announce all of the names.

There will be no propaganda, no expose of the secrets of picture-making. It is not a moving picture tour of Hollywood. It is a real, fast moving story. And the cast!

Just about everybody big that you can think of.

Directed by the man who made "The Old Homestead."

Without any question, "Hollywood" will be the box-office sensation of 1923!

NEILAN'S first great work for Goldwyn is set in a gigantic shipyard of the Pacific Coast.

In gripping dramatic pictures he tells the story of a girl who carries on the big enterprise of her father inspired by the honest ideals of the hard fighting pioneer.

Neilan's personality stands out from this great work like a million dollars. Strong in entertainment value, rich in beauty, powerful in human appeal, it has more than ever those sure-fire Neilan qualities you have always counted on for crowded houses and real profits.

TWO BIG 1923 SERIALS

Another Million Dollar Picture!

NO, it didn't cost a million but IT'S WORTH IT!

WE won't place an "exhibition value" of a million dollars on it but IT'S WORTH IT!

WE won't charge you on the basis of a million dollars but IT'S WORTH IT!

GOSH! I never saw a better picture in my life than Round No. 5 of "The New Leather Pushers." It is called "Strike Father, Strike Son."

IT is not twelve reels long but it's worth it. It's not ten, eight, six, or five reels long. It is only two reels in length but YOU CAN TAKE MY WORD THAT IT WILL SEND YOUR PEOPLE INTO A FRENZY OF DELIGHT.

I'M a case-hardened picture producer, harder to satisfy than any exhibitor or any movie fan I ever met. It takes something like dynamite to get a rise out of me, as far as pictures are concerned.

AND this picture is dynamite!

THE first reel sets you up on top of a can of pure dynamite and the second reel simply blows you to hellangone!

THE success of the "Leather Pushers" which included six two-reel pictures has been eclipsed by the success of our second series known as "The New Leather Pushers." We are getting letters from men AND FROM WOMEN who are simply wildly enthusiastic about this double series of prize fight episodes.

IT is red meat and the world is hungry for it. It is so beautifully handled that EVERY EPISODE HAS BECOME A GREATER ATTRACTION THAN EVEN THE GREAT BIG EXPENSIVE FEATURE PICTURES RUNNING AS HIGH AS TEN AND TWELVE REELS.

I WENT into the projection room dead tired after a hard day's work. I didn't care whether school kept or not. I had just about reached the conclusion that the moving picture business was too hard a job. And then I saw this picture!

EXCITEMENT! Thrills! Comedy! A whale of a good story, all too briefly told—Witwer at his very best. Director Pollard at his very best. Reginald Denny at his very best. A corking good cast and A FIGHT THAT WILL SIMPLY BOWL YOU OVER! I came out of the projection room laughing and excited, all pepped up and ready to tackle another day's work this very night!

MAN alive, if you don't book AND FEATURE every single episode of both "Leather Pushers" series, you're clean daft! You are overlooking a sure clean-up.

IT won't cost you a million BUT IT'S WORTH IT!

"Human Hearts," from the play by Hal Reid, featuring House Peters, directed by King Baggot.

FOOLISH WIVES—"Without doubt this is the greatest picture ever produced. We broke all records with it. We don't care how big a picture was ever produced before, it can't come up to the tremendous drawing power of 'Foolish Wives.'" — ALBERT DOBBS, Empire Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

THE STORM—(With Virginia Valli, House Peters and Matt Moore). "'The Storm' is undoubtedly the most remarkable picture of the year. It is superior in every way to the stage version. Universal has certainly scored again."—J. FEASEL, Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

PRISCILLA DEAN in UNDER TWO FLAGS—"Proved one of the outstanding events of the season on its opening at The Granada. . . . The Press was unusually lavish in its praise. . . . Thank you for the opportunity of presenting this picture."—J. A. PARTINGTON, Granada Theatre, San Francisco, Calif.

HUMAN HEARTS—(Starring House Peters). "'Human Hearts' is such a tremendous box office attraction we were forced to extend engagement from five to seven days. One of the most successful runs we ever had. No matter how strong I express an opinion of this picture, consider it mild."—OWEN McKIVOTT, Bijou Theatre, Racine, Wis.

SPECIAL CAST IN
THE WOMAN WHO FOOLED HERSELF
(ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS)

Here is a fine production in every sense of the word. Excellent acting, beautiful sets, an interesting story, told against picturesque background makes it a feature meriting every consideration. Many exploitation angles and will live up to everything said for it. Directed by Charles A. Logue and Robert Ellis. Six parts.

"The Woman Who Fooled Herself" is one of the best pictures presented by Associated Exhibitors for some time. With May Allison and Robert Ellis in featured parts supported by such players as Frank Currier, Robert Schable, Louis Dean and Rafael Arcos, interpretation of the first order is given a story that is interest-absorbing and pleasing from start to finish. Miss Allison does unusually fine work in an exacting role.

It is a picture that is probably best described as being "rich" in all its phases. The photography is above reproach, and scenes on sea and in tropical country where much of the action takes place are elaborate and beautiful. From New York to Porto Rico the scenes shift, unfolding the tale of a pretty chorus girl on a mission for unscrupulous capitalists who succumbs to the love and hospitality of a southern family.

The action is fast throughout and the production combines virtually every angle that assures audience appeal of a high-class photodrama.

Briefly the story tells of a young actress, "broke" and out of work who accepts a commission to bring strife between a wealthy old Porto Ricoan and his grandson in order that her employers may obtain control of certain properties. She goes to Porto Rico and following a series of events is taken into the household of the old man and his son. She learns to like both, but her employers force her to bring about the break between the boy and his grandfather. She obtains the option on the boy's land but later her love for him proves too strong and she returns it.

WOMAN WHO FOOLED HERSELF

This is the first of a series of Edward A. McManus productions being made in Porto Rico. Because of the locale of production the first story which Charles A. Logue developed is laid in New York and Central America. As author and director Logue has done a worth-while job. The picture has May Allison and Robert Ellis as the featured players of a good cast. The subject is one that will stand up anywhere under any conditions and it is strong enough to be given more than a single day run. As a matter of fact, it could well have stood up with some of the pre-release productions that are getting the Broadway showings in the big houses.

In photography and action it is far and away ahead of the general run of pictures that play the Loew houses without first having had a pre-release showing. And in story there is nothing than the average motion picture fan could ask for that isn't in the picture. Possibly a slight comedy relief might have been added to the other good qualities.

Miss Allison has a corking role as the showgirl out of work who lends herself to a Central American trip as a star dancer for one of the big cafes to snare the grandson of a wealthy old Spanish rancher, so he will sell his interest in the estate to a large American exporting combination. Robert Ellis plays the young man who is to be the victim of her wiles, the thread of the story hinging on the fact that the man she is supposed to vamp to his ruin, with the result that after he has signed away his share of the land she wins back the papers for him in time to prevent the company taking over the lands.

Frank Currier plays the venerable and excitable old Spaniard to perfection, and the two heavies of the cast are done by Robert Schable and Lewis Dean, both of whom give finished performances.

Miss Allison looked decidedly pretty on the screen and showed to great advantage in the dancing scenes, she at least stepping when it was necessary to do so. In the emotional portions of the story she was equally at ease and handled herself capably.

From a production standpoint the picture looks as though considerable money had been spent on it, there being two or three rather big scenes that stand out. It is a picture that you won't go wrong in playing.

"Sure-Fire Flint"

A Cyclonic Comedy Drama That Is Genuine Knockout And Ranks As Best Of Its Kind.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Johnny Hines, besides being a clean-cut, likeable and human comedian, is equally at home when it comes to performing fearless acrobatic feats, smashing into fast moving trains, and also a terpsichorean expert who would make even the illustrious Maurice blush But that's another way of saying that Johnny Hines is as versatile an artist as there is on the screen and certainly he has created a lovable character with an individualism that puts him in a class by himself It is an original characterization that is a mixture of Wallace Reid and Harold Lloyd.

Aod in his latest vehicle, "Sure-Fire Flint," Johnny Hines not only exceeds the expectations of his most liberal friends, but through it will add many, many thousand more admirers to his list, for this comedy drama is a genuine knockout, so chockful of laughs that your sides fairly ache when it is all over But it also has pathos, thrills and romance All of which testifies to the high calibre showmanship of all those who in any way contributed to the production of the picture, which is good enough for the very best theatres in this or other lands

Charles C Burr made a lot of promises when he selected this story for Johnny But he didn't go far enough in these "Sure-Fire Flint" is Hines' masterpiece and will make Burr a richer producer-distributor Taken from any angle, the picture stands out like a powerful lighthouse on a dark night Direction, production, photography, lighting and last, but far from the least in value, titling—all of these are of the first water, flawless, and contribute to make a superlatively refreshing attraction

This writer "caught" the picture at the Olympia in Boston and on Wednesday night at the Biltmore Hotel we allowed ourselves to be pushed, shoved, elbowed, pressed and stepped on by seemingly hundreds who strove through the hour and 22 minutes consumed in projecting the picture—and still we enjoyed it even more so than in Boston, for on the second occasion there was Jimmy Bradford and his learned musicians who raised the entertainment value of the feature with their timely renditions "Sure Fire Flint" is so enjoyable that you want to see it over and over again, for every title conceived by Ralph Spence, is a treat in comedy pathos and general dramatic construction

Ralph Spence has contributed materially to the success of many pictures, but in this instance he had a really big comedy drama with to work. His work couldn't result for the "meat" or The action was The story

JOHNNY HINES'S latest achievement, "Sure-Fire Flint," is a comedy drama no exhibitor can afford to overlook It is a picture with a human heart, full of typical Hines thrillers and comedy that is refreshingly entertaining. This is any audience's picture Its appeal reaches out to everybody, for there is combined in this production elements that interest all sorts of fans. C. C. Burr has given the independent market a production of which it well should feel proud. It is well constructed, superbly acted and cleverly directed by Dell Henderson. Johnny Hines is rightfully the "whole works" Photographically, the feature is picturesque. Briefly, "Sure-Fire Flint" is the surest fire comedy drama this writer has seen in many a day It should jam every house where shown.

SURE-FIRE FLINT

(C. C. BURR)

This second Hines feature is sure-fire stuff. It has about everything in it. You can promise them comedy, tragedy, thrills and romance, orphanage sob stuff, war, radio, polite comedy, slapstick, serial stunts and love interest. Mechanically excellent, good action, farcial effects amusing and titles well written. Six reels. Hop to it.

After all, there's only one Johnny Hines. He's just "Torchy" to most of us and "Sure-Fire Flint" is a typical "Torchy" tale, only longer, with equal parts of pathos, tragedy and drama nicely mixed with quaint humor. Aod it has a happy, snappy finish that will send 'em away with a smile. It starts out with a bang and keeps up the pace for the most part until the fade-out and for audiences who like good, clean, swift comedy it provides the best of entertainment.

The story begins in a beautiful home, where J Barney Sherry is shown the proud father of a new born baby, and the whole nation celebrating—for it is July 4. The sad separation of two little baby orphans is shown, when the girl is adopted by a wealthy family. Years elapse, the war finds Flint in the trenches, where he saves his captain and rescues a message from a German bringing back also several souvenirs. The war over, he finds himself penniless in New York, and becomes a taxi driver. By a ruse he gets business, but is discharged, theo he becomes a waiter and takes part in a dancing act. Here he meets the lady of his dreams and her foster father. He goes to the Reynolds steel mills to return a wallet, gets a job as assistant manager, and later becomes the manager, when Reynolds discharges the crocked manager, and incidentally the man to whom Miss Reynolds is engaged. Flint learns of a plot to steal the payroll and by means of various modes of traosportatioo he arrives at the office in time to preveot the robbery and also rescues Miss Reyoolds from inside the vault. The crook is shot by a pal and there the breezy romance ends.

Therc are attractive Prizma titles and several scenes are colored. The titles are snappy and the picture technically is excellent in every way. Ralph Spence wrote the titles.

Percentage

W. W. HODKINSON comes out for percentage in an article in this issue—a percentage dealing between distributor and exhibitor that will replace the present flat rental system.

He states his case with clear and compelling logic and facts.

In our candid opinion he is dead right; and if this busy business will stop long enough to do some sound thinking we will, all of us, have to decide that the fundamental reason why the exhibitor doesn't have better pictures with which to attract a large public today is simply because the buying system is a blundering, antiquated thing altogether out of joint with the times.

That's the fundamental fault with the box-office today.

It does seem as though we might profit by the breakdown of the biggest and best run near-monopoly this industry has ever had.

The General Film Company, as Mr. Hodkinson points out, began to fail because it also had a buying system that became out of joint with the times. The times demanded better pictures—pictures with more attraction for the public than the novelty of motion—and yet the General Film Company kept on buying from its producers at a flat rate, a rate based on footage and not on quality at all.

Its fundamental fault—the fault that caused its disintegration—was its buying system.

And this flat rate between producer and distributor was followed by the present percentage system and a new era in the business!

Charles Pathé came to this country in 1914 to find out what was wrong with the General Film Company. We have had few with the clear vision and cold logic this man has always had. He found out the trouble speedily, and he withdrew his producing firm.

He told the writer why he did so—in a few words. It was the ten-cents-a-foot buying system. He said, at the time: "What this business needs is a distributor who will function like a book publisher. He will receive the best books from the authors—all authors and let them earn all they can from the public."

Very simply expressed; but that is or should be, the distribution plan for pictures today.

* * *

As it is, the distributor is selling to the exhibitor today on just as flat and arbitrary a basis as the producer formerly sold to the General Film Company.

And that is against quality production.

The public today wants better pictures—not footage. And the public will pay for better pictures; and better pictures will pay the exhibitor and the producer.

But—not until the rental is based upon the box-office returns and not upon a charge fixed in advance of the showing and often out of all bearing with what the returns are.

Today the buying of pictures by the exhibitor is a matter of barter.

It has to be.

Where the exhibitor has the upper hand he steps upon the producer's neck and where the latter can dictate he does so ruthlessly.

We have often pointed out here that the exhibitors' worst enemy in the business is the other exhibitor who underpays and therefore makes him overpay.

But, we are all enemies under a system that can only breed distrust and hatred through bluffing and bunkum. That's what barter does. It has no place in a modern industry.

May we now state, in italics, for resounding emphasis: we do not advocate any present system of percentage.

Some existing percentage practices may be good; some may be worse than the worst flat rental deals. We don't support any.

What we do support is only the broad principle of paying for pictures out of the box-office returns.

And we contend that, because this principle is sound and because the present system is not, this industry today is on just as bad a basis as was the General Film Company several years ago when its fundamental practice discouraged good pictures.

W. W. Hodkinson says that there are draw-backs to percentage; so does H. D. Wood of London (in the Kinematograph); so will any seasoned distributor.

But the kinks can be untied, and they will be. As a matter of fact, there are exhibitors today playing percentage who are eminently pleased with its results. It can be worked out on a mutually sales factory basis. The plan simply needs that elasticity that will recognize the good will value of the theatre on the one hand and on the other the advertising effort that will make the picture play for all it is worth.

There's one great equation in this business which we constantly forget.

And that's—the public.

The public rules our destiny. We've got to give the public what it wants or take the consequences. We must work with the public, gear our machines up to it.

What the public pays for a picture is the only true measure of its worth.

Take this measure as a basis and give the exhibitor, distributor and producer each a percentage part of the box-office receipts and you will lay the foundation stones of a reordering of this industry that will result in better pictures, better profits and the business co-ordination and solidity we so sadly lack today.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

C. FRANCIS JENKINS writes from his busy laboratory in Washington: "I am now, as you doubtless know, devoting my entire attention to the perfection of methods and means for the transmission of Pictures-by-Radio, and we have attained such skill in the use of the apparatus, that we believe the time is ripe for its introduction into the industry. We rather expect that within the course of fifteen or eighteen months we shall have developed apparatus for the transmission of Motion-Pictures-by-Radio, as speed is the only problem remaining for solution."

C. Francis Jenkins did a lot for the projection machine. And his perseverance is indomitable, and his skill is great. Pictures by Radio! Sounds skylarky—but who knows? How nicely it would solve our present-day baffling economic problem of distribution.

THEY'VE had the Prince of Wales married off to nearly every eligible on the continent. But he hasn't a thing on Charlie Chaplin, who has been reported engaged to a dozen or more of our prettiest screen buds. The rumor will not evaporate that he is to marry Pola Negri. Some of our best scandal sheets have already sniffed the odor of orange blossoms and heard the music of the wedding bells.

ERNST LUBITSCH, accompanied by Frau Lubitsch and his assistant director, arrived in New York Tuesday on the S. S. Roosevelt. The talented German will journey to Los Angeles to direct Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." Since he can do the costume drama about as well as anyone (perhaps a little bit better than most of them) there is reason to feel confident that the picture will faithfully carry out the spirit, color and atmosphere of the period in which it is laid.

HARDLY a week goes by now when the screen is not giving its public a perfect sample of real pantomime. Which indicates surely that acting before the camera has become an art. The latest disciple of genuine screen expression in Laurette Taylor, who makes her film debut in her lovable role of Peg which has delighted audiences before the footlights. "Peg o' My Heart" is one of those enduring plays which, like "Way Down East," will go on forever. A simple little romance, it lives because of its colorful characterization.

Laurette Taylor has played Peg for so long that she has made it mellow, and now she has brought it to the screen. The photoplay has existed for many years now, but future historians will record that Miss Taylor's vital and vivid study of Peg is one of its greatest expressions. The star has jumped from stage to screen and comes forth from the shadow world as one of its inspired leaders. Her performance is so easy, so natural, so human, so thoroughly expressive of the emotions of the colorful Irish lass that one wonders how she accomplished her work so successfully without showing a single trace of being camera-conscious. Then you remember that she is an artist. And art always finds expression.

For sheer charm of mood and impulse—for sheer charm of caprice and whimsicality, Laurette Taylor's Peg is without question the richest portrayal of the silversheet. It is hoped that the star will continue to enrich the silent drama with her art. Here is a talent which is sorely needed in this day when personalities are selected more for beauty of face and figure than they are for their gifts of expression.

FROM the Goldwyn studios comes an invitation to the public to pick the cast for "Ben Hur." Each one is asked to consider what figures of the screen would be most suitable in the roles of Ben Hur, Messala, Esther and Iris. The original Ben Hur was interpreted by Edward Morgan, who passed away many years ago, and was later portrayed by Bill Farnum. No other than Bill Hart, himself, played the character of Messala in the original company.

DOUG and Mary have returned to Los Angeles. Edward Knoblock, the playwright who was responsible for much of the success of "The Three Musketeers," accompanied Robin Hood and Tess and will be associated with them once more.

* * *

THERE has been no fanfare of trumpets ushering in Vitagraph's very human picture of newspaper life in a small city, namely, "A Front Page Story," but we are of the opinion that the company should toot its horn in giving us such a pleasing slice of reality, the plot of which revolves around a conflict between the local editor and the mayor. Jess Robbins is the director who put over this neat little document. He is the man who produced "Too Much Business," and his latest opus indicates that he has a firm grasp upon what constitutes the intimate touch.

Most directors have erred in presenting an accurate portrayal of a newspaper office. We go on record in saying that many of them don't know what the inside of a newspaper office looks like. They will send their cub reporter out equipped with pads. And these fledglings take down their notes and are never seen writing up their stories. Jess Robbins gives us a small newspaper plant which is complete even to the composing room. And James Corrigan as the editor is a genuine type.

The picture also presents Edward Horton, who is as gifted a comedian as there is on the screen today. He puts over his comedy in all seriousness—as all comedy should be played. Ask Willie Collier, he knows. But because he doesn't dress himself up like a Christmas tree and play to the gallery he is not getting the recognition which he deserves. Horton is human and an everyday sort of fellow. There is nothing of the strutting actor about him. The feature has another rich character in the mayor, played with small town pomp by Lloyd Ingraham.

We would like to see Jess Robbins putting out all the stories of small town life which are flavored with comedy. His humor is subtle and novel and appealing. And he never exaggerates. If you don't think he knows his business look over "A Front Page Story." There's nothing picturey about it—it is real.

WHAT? What?? What??? Los Angeles churches must now obtain police permits or preachers and members of congregations will be liable to a fine of $500 or a sentence of six months in jail. The clergy have discovered that an ordinance aimed to regulate social clubs and passed by the city council at the urging of church organizations, affected the churches as well. The ordinance defines "social club" as an association of persons for the promotion of sports, athletics, literature, science, politics, good fellowship, charity, religion, citizenship, moral or social ethics, benevolence or other common objects. Probably the churches have taken action to have the ordinance repealed.

The occasion of the dinner was a token of appreciation by the hosts for the kindly reception and loyal cooperation extended to them.

Among the guests were Larry Semon, Marcus Loew, Rupert Hughes, Al Christie, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Niblo, Mr. and Mrs. King Vidor, Bessie Love, Anno Q. THE way Warner Bros. are going into the market for their screen purchases we look to see them enlarge their float or build a new one to advertise their wares. Notice comes that they have bought the screen rights to "Beau Brummel," the play by Clyde Fitch in which Mansfield starred so successfully; "Cornered," the play produced by Henry W. Savage in which Madge Kennedy starred, and "How to Educate a Wife," by Elinor Glyn.

RUDOLPH BYLEK reached the high places the other day. He concluded that if he was to experience the seventh heaven he might as well get as close to the celestian region as possible. So nothing lower than the top of the Woolworth Building would suit Bylek's high ideals. The marital knot was tied at high noon. Who is Rudolph Bylek? When you walk on a George Melford set you will find the young benedict acting in the capacity of technical director. He has just completed "Java Head," and is responsible for the decorations in "Moran of the Lady Letty," "Burning Sands," and "Ebb Tide."

FURTHER evidence of the fact that good pictures will get first runs anywhere is seen by officials of Universal, who announce that "The Flirt," Hobart Henley's picturization of Booth Tarkington's story, is to go into the Rialto theatre, New York, December 24. The cast of this Universal Jewel includes Helen Jerome Eddy and Eileen Percy.

THE second annual dinner of the Allied Laboratories Association was held at Delmonico's the evening of December 7th, and was a largely attended and a very successful occasion.

Major Tom Evans acted as toastmaster and introduced the following speakers: Courtland Smith of the Hays organization, Brigadier-General Charles H. Cole of Massachusetts, Joseph Coran of the Bay State Film Company, Boston, Jules Brulatour, L. J. Boynton, Joseph Dannenberg, and Martin Quigley.

Courtland Smith spoke of the huge advertising possibilities and necessities of the industry and urged that a large fund be promoted and used for this purpose. He referred to the fact that there are over 275,000 schools in the United States and that at some time or another all would be using films for visual education.

Brigadier-General Cole, who led the recent remarkable campaign against censorship in Massachusetts and who is also a member of the Bay State Film Company, made a practical and compelling speech in which he featured the need of securing capital in the industry.

IT is becoming more and more of a problem for the producer to know what to do with unhappy endings, when adapting to the screen a book or play which ends unhappily. In "Blood and Sand," the ending was preserved, Gallardo meeting his death. The critics acclaimed it as a remarkable picture, but the public, in many instances, objected to thus having its beloved Rodolph come to such an end. Now, in "The Beautiful and Damned," the ending provided by F. Scott Fitzgerald has been modified to permit of a happier finish. Again the critics have hailed is as a splendid picture, but have taken exception to the change in the ending. So what is a poor producer to do? Griffith experimented with the tragic finale in "Broken Blossoms," and while the picture was an artistic triumph, it was not his greatest box-office success, although it did succeed to a greater extent than is usually thought. Norma Talmadge, in "The Passion Flower," experimented with the tragic ending, and loud were the protests from her admirers. If "Hamlet" should be filmed, as Augustus Thomas has proposed, the question would arise again, for it would be out of the question to end with Hamlet going "out into the great open spaces, to start over again, where men are men and women are—women." There are certain stories which can never be logically filmed without a tragic ending, but the question arises whether or not screen art and the screen public have yet advanced sufficiently to warrant the filming of such stories at present.

Statistics of the Motion Picture Industry

Resume of Facts and Figures On Theatres of Country Gathered In Survey is Given

By L. C. Moen

ALTHOUGH that portion of the statistical survey of the film industry covering production and distribution remains to be completed, it is possible at this point to summarize the theatre situation briefly, as a result of the material now in. The full value of these cannot be brought out until the complete statistical picture of the industry can be drawn, but every indication points to the fact that the present figures on theatres will stand substantially as they are.

Work on the remaining portion of the survey is proceeding as rapidly as possible, and it is hoped that early in 1923 the figures covering the production and distribution and motion pictures will be ready, making available for the first time authentic statistics on these phases of the industry.

The actual results of the survey to date may be summed up as follows:

1. Of the total number of theatres in the country, 91.23% have less than 1,000 seats, and the average seating capacity is 507. This is substantially the same condition as existed in 1916.

2. Nearly one-third of the theatres are open seven days a week, with about 30% open six days. Thirteen per cent are open two days, 10% are open three days, and the small remainder are open one, four and five. The average number of days open, taking the theatres as a whole, is five. Six years ago, the average was five and one-half, making a decline of 9% in the number of playdays per theatre. The number of six-day houses has declined greatly since 1916, while the seven-day houses remain about the same.

3. The average number of people employed is seven, including the manager, operator, musicians, etc. This would indicate that about 87,500 people are engaged in the theatre end of the business.

4. The percentage of exhibitors reporting exhibitor competition was 47.68%

5. At matinees, 83.79% of the theatres charged from 10 to 24 cents, and 15.24% charged from 25 to 49 cents. The small remainder charged more than 49 cents. At evening performances, 56.44% ranged in price from 10 to 24 cents and 40.30% charged from 25 to 49 cents. The average matinee price was 12 to 28 cents, and the average evening price from 17 to 36 cents. The average price in 1916 was 10½ cents. The percentage of houses charging more than 25 cents is now 16.21%; in 1916 it was only 3.88%.

6. The percentage of theatres which have lowered their admission prices recently is 32.55%.

7. The percentage of theatres which raise their prices on special attractions is 55.80%.

8. One-third of all the theatres reported only 100 to 200 paid admissions daily, and the average daily patronage for all theatres was 364, as compared with an average seating capacity of 507.

9. The length of runs has increased greatly since 1916. During that period, the number changing program but once a week has increased from about 3% to 10%; the number changing twice a week, from about 8% to about 22%; the number changing three times has increased from 13% to 25%; the number of four change houses has increased from 12% to 18%; the five change houses have increased from 3% to 7%. During the same period, the number of houses changing six times weekly has declined from 37% to 15%, and the seven change houses from 24% to 4%. The average number of changes weekly is now three and one-half; in 1916 it was five. This is an increase of 43% in the average length of runs.

These figures must be considered very carefully, however, as they might easily be misleading. It must be borne in mind, for instance, that a great many more of these houses change program daily than is apparent at first sight. A house open open three days a week, for instance, and changing its program three times, would be listed as a three-change-a-week-house, although it actually changes daily. Also, a house closed on Sunday, and changing six times a week, would be listed as a six-change-house, although it, too, is a daily change theatre. In considering the heavy decline in the number of six and seven-change-houses since 1916, it must be remembered that the number of houses open six and seven days has declined very materially. The number of week run houses is smaller than would appear at first glance. The number of one-change houses is 9.90%, but 6.87% of the houses are only open one day a week, and hence can change but once, which lowers this figure markedly.

10. The average length of program is eight reels. The majority of theatres run from 6 to 10 reels.

11. One-fourth of the theatres run but one show daily, and one-third run but two. The average number of shows per day is three.

12. The most used item, excluding the feature, proved to be the two-reel comedy, used in nearly three-fourths of the houses, followed by the news weekly, used in nearly 59%. The one-reel comedy fell somewhat below the two-reel, being checked by slightly more than 46% of the houses. Next in order were: Serial, animated cartoon, scenic or travel, screen magazine, two-reel drama, vaudeville and prologue.

13. Slightly more than 85% of the theatres use music. Of these, about 46% use an organ, 30% an orchestra, and the remainder a piano.

14. Good business regardless of the attraction played was reported by 23.98% of the theatres.

15. Business was reported as hurt following an attraction which draws extra large business by 68.77% of the houses.

16. The feature is regarded as 68% of the box office attraction; the short subjects as 17%; and music as 15%. In the case of houses playing vaudeville, this was given a value of 33%, the other items being reduced accordingly.

17. More than half of the theatres reported business as worse than 1914, and practically three-fourths as worse than 1919, 1920 or 1921. Business was expected to be better for the remainder of the season, however, by 35% and only 15% expected it to be worse.

18. A much larger attendance in years when there is general prosperity was reported by 97.29% of the theatres.

19. Nearly half of the theatres experience their best season in the fall; one-fourth in the winter, and one-fifth in the spring. Nearly two-thirds have their worst season in the summer.

20. More than one-third of the patrons received their income from manufacturing industries; one-third from miscellaneous sources and the remainder from agriculture, mining and livestock, 11, 10 and 12%, respectively.

21. Western pictures are the most popular, followed closely by feature comedies. These are followed by a group of three nearly on a parity, famous books and plays, society and Northwoods dramas. Somewhat less popular are light farce and melodrama, and last of all, heavy drama and costume pictures.

22. Exhibitors report highly unfavorable experience with foreign made pictures, including French, German and Italian, the percentages ranging from 80 to 90% on "poor" for the three.

23. Rentals are considered too high by 95.23% of exhibitors.

24. Only 30.63% of exhibitors favor cheapening production, however, to lower rentals.

25. The average house overhead is 36.11%.

26. The average film rental is 39.45%.

27. The average advertising cost is 12.16%.

28. This places the average operating cost of theatres at 87.72%, leaving a margin of 12.28%.

29. The portion of the total rental going for the feature is 63.35%, 36.65% going for the short subjects.

30. Pressbooks are reported as of assistance by 87.88% of exhibitors.

31. Exploitation is done from the trade paper by 58.91%.

32. Satisfactory newspaper co-operation is received by 57.02% of the exhibitors.

Fairbanks Is Loser In Injunction Suit

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' application for an injunction to restrain the Leader Film Corporation and others from re-issuing and reconstructing films in which he appeared for the Triangle Film Company under a contract made in 1915 has been denied. The suit was filed several months ago and is now denied by Supreme Court Justice Wagner.

In concluding his opinion Justice Wagner said: "If the actual display of the pictures should be a garbled one, injurious to the player's well known reputation, a legal remedy exists to stop their exploitation. At this juncture, however, I see no basis for such procedure as would justify the issuance of a temporary injunction."

Fairbanks sued on the ground that the contemplated action of the defendant constituted a violation of the statutes which prohibit the use of a person's pictures for the purposes of trade. The court pointed out that Fairbanks was merely an employee of the corporation and not the producer of the pictures, for which reason he had no proprietory right in them and therefore his suit could not be upheld on those grounds.

Hodkinson Answers Some Pressing Questions

Declares Percentage Booking Is Logical Answer for Lack of Better Pictures

W. W. HODKINSON, founder of Paramount and pioneer in the fight for better pictures, answers some of the most pressing questions in the industry in Collier's Weekly under date of December 16. Under the title, "Why You Don't Get Better Films," Mr. Hodkinson declares that it is his firm belief that percentage booking is the answer. In the course of his article he says:

"Already the situation in the motion picture industry has become acute. You have seen the censorship advances. You have seen the need for such articles as have been printed in Collier's and have applauded them when they appeared. The time has come to 'rise in meetin'' and speak out.

"First and foremost, to bring about a condition where pictures will be sold to you directly on their own merits instead of to exhibitors choosing blindly for you, on the strength of misleading trade advertising, a strict percentage basis of distribution between the producer and exhibitor, though the medium of a neutral distributing agency, will be necessary.

"I don't want to tire you with technicalities, but this is a vital change that will benefit the entire industry as well as you, and it's worth getting clear. At present pictures are sold (or, more properly, leased) outright for certain theatres or certain territories. An exhibitor reads the ads of 'Hattie's Uncle,' we'll say, and concludes it must be a fine picture. He looks at it and is persuaded by a good salesman that his audiences will like it. He pays, we'll say, $400 for a week's run. At the same time he pays $100 for a less pretentiously advertised film that we'll call 'Land's End.'

"'Hattie's Uncle' does very poor business. But 'Land's End' proves to be a clean-up. We'll say that Mr. Exhibitor breaks about even—just a reasonable profit—on the two pictures.

"Under present conditions your money goes to the producer-distributor who oversold 'Hattie's Uncle.' The producer of 'Land's End' may go to the wall. On a straight percentage basis the producer who deserved it, whoever he might be, would get your money.

"So much for that. It will have to come."

When asked to elaborate on his Collier's Weekly statement Mr. Hodkinson said:

"So long as the motion picture business is at a virtual standstill, bound by a system of bartering between the producer and the exhibitor, I cannot but believe that nothing but the adoption of a system of percentage dealing between these two elements will cut the bonds. Just as the arbitrary selling of pictures on 'footage basis' held the industry back until my original percentage plans were put into effect upon the formation of the Paramount organization in 1914, so will its present progress be retarded until such time as producers are definitely rewarded for good product through the pulling power of their productions at the box office, and in no other way. In spite of the difficulties that lay in the way of this plan, I believe that the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages, and I believe that ultimately the adoption of the percentage system is inevitable.

"In working out the details of the percentage basis between producers and distributors in 1914 I realized then that as long as the outright sale of motion pictures continued the progress of the industry would be blocked, because the distributor would naturally always endeavor to buy his product as cheaply as possible, and the producer, in turn, would endeavor to produce as cheaply as possible to increase the margin of his profit. The industry, and I mean by this the exhibitor and his audiences, was caught between the millstones of two greeds. In other words, the price of ten cents per foot for positive film was for years the arbitrary measure that held the business within the confines of the 'nickelodeon.'

"Upon the abandonment of the ten-cents-per-foot limitation and the substitution of a percentage basis, whereby the producer had an indefinitely continuing interest in the ownership of his product, he was encouraged to improve his productions, which had the effect of giving the distributor very much better quality in product, and, in turn, enabled the exhibitor to get higher admissions for this improved product.

"Now, however, another danger looms up. The gradual acquisition of distributing channels by the mass producers has reached a point where the distributor has been almost eliminated as a neutral factor, and the producer, in effect, has a direct contact with the exhibitor. Faced with the necessity of manufacturing a large quantity of product, the producer is exerting every power within his reach to force the exhibitor to pay maximum rentals regardless of the quality of his product. Often he has had to resort to over-statement and misrepresentation, to the creation of false values, to force these prices. The exhibitor has begun to lose confidence in the producer and his promises and an insecure condition results, which is reflected in the present continual controversies between exhibitor buying groups and the producer-distributor interests. The exhibitor is continually endeavoring to assert his independence against the producer-distributor's desire to strengthen his domination over exhibitor interests.

"Where he has thought it necessary, the producer-distributor has even entered the exhibiting field and has purchased theatres for the express purpose of forcing the output of his picture factories, regardless of their fitness.

"Does it not seem simple procedure, as a means of ending this conflict, for the adoption of a system whereby the theatre owner and the producer divide box office revenue on an equitable basis, with the distributor standing between them as a neutral and independent factor? The big question seems to be: What is an equitable division of receipts?

"We find today that the exhibitor is unalterably opposed to percentage bookings for two reasons, both of them justified.

"First, the producer has demanded of the exhibitor that he pay flat rentals for indifferent product, reserving the lion's share of the better product for himself.

"Second, the exhibitor fears to disclose the records of his business to producer interests that are actively competing with him in the operation of theatres and who might very well use the information thus gained to raise rentals on average product and to guide him in the establishment of competing houses in particularly productive territory.

"The exhibitor, indeed, is between two dilemmas. On the one hand he sees his audience dwindling by reason of the fact that he has found it necessary to play a great deal of inferior product, produced by the factory producers, which product is an effective dam against better independent producer's pictures reaching him; and, on the other hand, he fears to trust the producer to deal fairly with him if he opened his books to the examination necessary where percentage contracts are enforced.

"This brings us squarely to the present need of a neutral element standing betwen the two—an independent and unbiased influence that would see that justice was dealt out to both parties impartially. This is the function of the neutral distributor who completes equitably the triangle of the industry.

"Furthermore, such a three-way alignment of the industry—independent production, neutral distribution and independent theatre operation—would stop the three great economic wounds from which the industry must bleed to death if they are not staunched:

"First—Waste in surplus and unnecessary distributing systems.

"Second—Waste in the production of factory motion pictures and independent products which they shut out, which are only partly utilized by the market.

"Third—The loss of public favor and admissions resulting from its failure to attend theatres where the average of quality is so low.

"On my desk today is a letter from a prominent clubman in a large city near New York, which reflects an attitude that is becoming general. This is a danger signal that the industry can well heed:

"'We have a membership of over 900 and have an entertainment hall with a seating capacity of over 500, and if the cost of the films that you refer to is not excessive I think the company . . . can make arrangements with our people . . . although I must confess that motion pictures, as a rule, do not appeal to the membership at large. No red-blooded man, however, would offer the slightest objection; in fact, most of them would welcome a diversity along the lines of nature and sportsmanship rather than the class of motion pictures that we have had from time to time.

"'Unfortunately, most of the members are inclined to taboo all motion pictures simply on account of the unsatisfactory quality of some of the pictures shown and because of an ever-surfeit of this class of entertainment.'"

Famous Players' German Experiment Fails

EFA Brought to a Close; Berlin Studio Kept for Distribution; Kaufman Winds Up Affairs

By Jerome Lachenbruch

AL. KAUFMAN, the representative of Famous Players in the European Film Alliance (the EFA), never looked so thoroughly relieved and contented as when I found him today flashing a check book, preparatory to settling up all unfulfilled contracts with German directors and actors. He wanted to talk about the speed of various steamers to America, but as I was familiar only with the fourteen-day variety, he agreed to compromise on subjects for discussion and tell me about the wind-up of the Famous Players experiment at producing in Germany. While he told the story he wore his famous smile-that-won't-come-off.

"As a producing unit," he began, "the EFA will cease to exist, but Famous will nevertheless keep the studio in Berlin and use the organization here as a distributing centre. Ike Blumenthal will be manager of distribution, and all Paramount productions suitable for the German market will be sent here. Furthermore, if we should need a bit of European or Egyptian stuff for an American picture we shall send a few actors over here and take the necessary scenes."

The decision of Famous Players not to throw good money after bad has meant the cancellation of several long term contracts and the withdrawal from production of several pictures that were about to be begun. This definite move has stopped a new Lubitsch picture, a farce in which he had great hopes. Lubitsch has not yet decided whether he will come to America, and up to present writing he has not given Famous Players a definite answer. Luhitsch would like to produce in the United States, but he fears that his hands would be tied as soon as he came over, and, as a result, that his pictures would no longer have distinction. However, he may still decide to take a chance in the American film arena.

Among the directors whose contracts were settled by Mr. Kaufman (to the satisfaction of all concerned) are Joe May, the producer of "The Indian Tomb;" Dimitri Buchowetzki, who made "All for a Woman"; George Jacoby and Lothar Mendez. The most important actors who had large dollar contracts were Emil Jennings and Harry Liedtke, the latter a charming German "Doug." Fairhanks.

Those who are interested in the screen as an art will regret that Max Reinhardt, probably the greatest revolutionary influence in the modern theatre, was not able to fulfil his contract with the EFA. He had been engaged to make a screen version of "Paradise Lost." Knowing the artistic conscience of Reinhardt, I feel sure that this work would have taken about two years to complete. Reinhardt, it may be recalled, made "The Miracle" about ten years ago. But to return to Mr. Kaufman and his views on producing in Germany.

"Germany cannot consistently produce pictures for America," he said, "for three definite reasons. First, there are not enough beautiful women who can act and who know how to wear clothes; secondly, the men rarely look distinguished in a modern type of picture, though many are excellent actors; and thirdly, the American point of view is not understood, and consequently too many purely local mannerisms destroy the value of a picture for America. I am speaking only of the picture that must be a commercial success to justify its production, for I admit that when it comes to producing an artistic picture like 'Caligari' (which was a financial failure in Germany as well as in America) Germany stands ahead of all other countries. But a producing organization like Famous Players must make a certain percentage of commercial successes to pay for its artistic failures. And that percentage has not been achieved in our German experiment."

Production Debacle Abroad Told by Lachenbruch

THE accompanying article is the fourth of a series being written exclusively for Motion Picture News by Jerome Lachenbruch on conditions in the foreign film market. The present article reveals the futility of American production efforts in Germany, and discusses in detail the failure of Famous Players-Lasky's experiment despite the wealth of ability, business genius and financial resources put behind the enterprise. Mr. Lachenbruch's article makes it clear that circumstances beyond the power of the Famous Players-Lasky officials to rectify were responsible for the unsuccessful termination of the venture. Famous has conducted a test, concluded that production abroad under present conditions is unadvisable, and wisely brought its studio activities in Germany to a close.

The reasons underlying this withdrawal, as quoted by Al Kaufman, Paramount's foreign representative, in an interview with Mr. Lachenbruch, and the personal observations made by the author himself form one of the most interesting articles of the series yet published.

In order for Famous Players to obtain the best forces in Germany, they had to pay American salaries to their leading players and directors; and though production itself is less expensive than in America, successes have been fewer and far less certain.

"The German producer,' said Mr. Kaufman, "can produce successfully for every country in Europe. He should consider America merely as a long chance. One can't make pictures on dollar salaries and feel sure that America will take the product. Germany has Scandinavia, Czecho-Slovakia, Italy, Finland; and now France and England are beginning to take her pictures."

During the past summer all German producers thought only of America, but since few recently made pictures have been sold, the producers are beginning to count less on our absorption of their productions. The present season finds hundreds of German pictures in America—unsold.

Mr. Kaufman was asked to give his opinion of the production in other European countries. From the standpoint of technical mastery, he thought the Swedish films were as good as ours, but that the subjects were too often unsuitable for American audiences. They are often morbid; the unpleasant things in life are pictured more often than the pleasant ones, and the American goes to the cinema to forget his troubles, not to relive them.

In speaking of picture production in Italy, Mr. Kaufman thinks it has come to a standstill.

"I know of but one film of any magnitude that is being made. That is 'Messalina,' a production on a larger scale than has ever been made. The sets are beautiful and gigantic. But on the whole production in Italy is dead. Heretofore every Italian producer has offered me his pictures for American distribution, but within the past year I have not had a request from one Italian concern to look at a picture. The financial situation in Italy is responsible for the shortage of production. Owing to the fact that some previous productions were not advantageously sold in America, the Italian bankers refuse to finance motion picture organizations to any large extent, with the result that production there has almost stopped.

"There is a very good reason for Italian pictures not being generally successful in America, and that is the overwhelming age of leading women. Italy seems to be in the state of picture development that we passed through about ten years ago. A director at that time usually had the authority to insist that his wife or his sweetheart play the leading role. But America overcame that handicap to a large extent; Italy doesn't seem to be aware of the fact that such a condition cannot exist for long without injuring its business. The leading feminine roles are almost always played by the wife or the mistress of the director or the subsidizing banker of the company, or by some woman with a personal drag with the person who controls the production.

"France can make good pictures, but a different set of conditions exists there than in any other European country. The banks subsidize producers less there than anywhere in the world. Yet France has some of the finest directors in the world, in Abel Glance, Marcel L'Hehiere, and Rousell, to mention only a few. And they all have difficulty in finding financial backing for their productions. Not only France but England also understands how to make pictures for America if given the chance, but the moneyed people in these countries do not support the industry. That explains the paucity of French and English pictures in America.

"England certainly can produce pictures that we can use. But it does not follow that Famous Players can produce in England for American consumption. The fact is that for an American company to work in England is too expensive a job. It costs too much to wait upon the weather in England when the salary list is in dollars. A native company, however, on a more modest budget than an American has to count on can produce successfully for the American market."

All this does not take into consideration the plain economic fact of supply and demand in America. The ordinary French or English or German picture hasn't a rosy path before it, as our own supply of program material is plentiful. With our thousands of actors and hundreds of producing units, the every-day demand for pictures can be and is adequately met. A foreign picture of similar type can not be sold sufficiently cheaply to undersell the home product. Only the extraordinary foreign film seems to me to have a place in the American photoplay theatre. For the production of the extraordinary film and its marketing in America, the obstacles have

Thomas Patten to Represent Hays on Coast

Former N. Y. Postmaster to Make "Model Industrial Community" of Producing Center

THOMAS G. PATTEN, former postmaster of New York City, has been appointed by Will H. Hays as the West Coast representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. Mr. Patten's special task, as described in a statement issued this week from the M. P. P. D. A.'s headquarters in New York, will be to develop the industry's producing center on the Pacific Coast into "a model industrial community." Mr. Patten is already in Hollywood making a preliminary survey of the work to which he has been assigned.

The new appointee has had a wide range of experience and is characterized by Mr. Hays as eminently fitted for the task that awaits him. From 1917 to 1921, he was postmaster of NewYork City, and prior to that time served for six years in Congress as a representative from New York. He has been identified prominently for years with the Democratic party in New York, and his selection by the former Republican Postmaster General is pointed to as indisputable evidence that Mr. Hays in his capacity as head of the producers' and distributors' organization of the motion picture industry is consulting only the best interests of the film industry and not party considerations. In addition to his political activities, Mr. Patten has won unusual success in a business way.

In a letter addressed to William A. Johnston, editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Hays outlines the purposes of Mr. Patten's assignment to the West Coast post and the task that awaits accomplishments at his hands. The letter follows in full:

"My Dear Mr. Johnston:—

"For some months we have been planning to inaugurate such activities of our association in Los Angeles County, Cal., as would make certain that the industry discharges its full duty in helping to maintain a model industrial community not only as to the industry's own activities, but in its relations to the splendid community of which it is a part.

"It is for that purpose that Mr. Thomas G. Patten has gone to Los Angeles to represent this association. Mr. Patten is a man of successful experience in large affairs. He was postmaster of New York City from 1917 to 1921, inclusive. Previous to that he was in Congress for six years, as a representative from New York, and has been very successful in business. He goes out to do this work in fullest sympathy and to stay indefinitely. The fact is the working conditions in the industry are very good now, the spirit of co-operation among the co-workers is much above the average, and the industry's activities already are a very definite and creditable part of the commercial and social fabric. As above indicated, however, we are going to make certain that everything that is possible to be done shall be done by the industry to make the activities of the motion picture business in that territory constitute an ideal industrial center, with the very best possible relationships within its own ranks, between the producers themselves, between the producers and employes, between the employes themselves, and between the coalesced industry and the public, with the fullest use of all the approved and recognized best methods in industrial community life, with the consequent best possible spirit, etc., in all of which recreation facilities, community centers, dormitories, matrons, cafeterias, etc., are incidents. This, I hope, will be one of the steps in the development of the fullest confidence and co-operation within the industry itself, in all its branches, and between the industry and the public. There are, I believe, inevitable consequent resultants from the development of the situation along these lines, which will be reflected in many ways, of course, including the quality of the pictures.

"Something like seventy-five per cent of our motion pictures are made in Los Angeles County. It is an interesting fact not generally known that the third largest industry in Los Angeles County is food production, which spent last year about $92,000,000, with a weekly payroll of $260,000; the second largest industry is petroleum, which spent last year $104,000,000, with a weekly payroll of $353,000 (and probably one-fourth of the oil produced in the country last year was produced in Los Angeles County). The largest industry in Los Angeles County is motion pictures, which spent last year nearly $140,000,000, with a weekly payroll of over $500,000. This makes, of course, the motion picture industry of the very first importance commercially there, and places upon the industry a definite responsibility in the commercial and community life of that section.

"I am writing this to you because I want you to know personally what we are really trying to do. There are thousands of employees, the business is closely owned and it would seem to be possible for the industry to maintain an industrial community which would be as complete a product by way of an industrial establishment as it is at all possible to have anywhere in any business.

"With very kindest personal regards always, I am

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed) "WILL H. HAYS."

Sennett Signs to Release Through Allied

A LONG term contract has been executed by which Mack Sennett will release his forthcoming motion picture product through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, the subsidiary organization of United Artists Corporation.

The contract was arranged and signed by Hiram Abrams, president of Allied Producers and Distributors, and Mr. Sennett. The first picture to be released under the new arrangement will be "Suzanna," a splendid film of romance, mystery, thrills, adventuresome action, gripping intrigue and an overwhelming supply of Mabel Normand comedy. The picture is set for an early release.

Valentino Is Loser In Appeal Of Suit

RODOLPH VALENTINO has been restrained by a decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court from appearing on the stage or in motion pictures "for any person, firm or corporation, other than the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, or for himself on his own account" until the breach of contract suit brought by Famous Players-Lasky against him is decided by the Supreme Court.

The appeal was made from the decision of Supreme Court Justice Wasservogel on September 30. It will probably be two months before Valentino will have an opportunity to prove charges brought by him against the corporation.

It is believed Valentino and his wife, Winifred Hudnut, will go to Europe shortly and appear in review and pictures under the management of Charles B. Cochran. It is said that for such a tour Valentino has been offered $3,500 weekly.

New Companies Fewer During Past Year

Even though December should prove itself a record-breaking month in the number of motion picture companies incorporating in New York State—and judging from the first week's business, there is little likelihood of this happening—the total number of such companies this year will fall far below that of a year ago, when 455 companies embarked in the motion picture business, and incorporated in New York State, with a capitalization represented of $28,373,400.

Up to December 1, this year, there have been 289 companies in the motion picture business incorporated at Albany, these having a combined capitalization of $17,782,100. Some of the past months were extremely lean, April for instance, witnessing but 15 companies incorporating, and these showing a capitalization of but $274,000. During the last two or three months, however, a most substantial gain has been shown, both in the number of companies incorporated, as well as the capitalization which they represent.

Last December, thirty companies incorporated, with a capitalization of $2,358,100. Even should a like number of companies incorporate this month, the year's total would still be a matter of 136 companies below a year ago.

Booking Combine Looms in Washington

LOCAL independent exhibitors intimate that a booking combine of local one and two-theatre chains is in its incipiency in Washington. While details of the plan, members of the combine and other information are withheld, it seems that the small white and colored houses object to the alleged ability of Harry Crandall in securing films at lower rentals than they can obtain.

Exchanges and theatre owners seem to be cognizant of the plant, and apparently it will succeed. Presumably, the Scheers, Eddie Phillips, also two theatres, the Byrams, with two or three houses, Miss Cohen, the Globe Amusement Company, and others will be in the group.

Reasons Given for Urging Music Tax Repeal

Exhibitors' Cooperation Is Urged to Combat Alleged Unjust Charge of Music Society

By Frank Rembusch

THEATRE owners, in a general way, agree that the so called Music Tax is unjust and unfair, but pay it because heretofore the case has seemed rather futile to refuse. After careful investigation we are convinced with proper effort we need not and should not pay the music tax. Recently Indiana exhibitors have asked us to find means of defeating this tax. Various plans to defeat the tax have been advocated. We have added some new means of defense that puts the matter in an entirely different light. We have associated exhibitors with us in this battle in several states, and we want to bring this matter to the attention of every exhibitor in America, with the view of enlisting the cooperation of all. The subject is rather comprehensive, and we have tried to boil down to a few words, data and evidence we have on hand, that would fill volumes.

In order to simplify it we have paragraphed all into offensive and defensive points, as follows:

Point One.—The Music Society collects a copyright charge when they sell the printed sheet. They add another charge where their music is played in a place operated for profit. We believe that the music publishers receive all the rewards they are entitled to under the copyright act, when they sell the printed sheet and that their claim to further charge for playing this music is invalid. If necessary, we propose to ask Congress to pass such legislation that will interpret the copyright law, so that copyright rewards shall come in the sale of the printed sheet only.

Point Two.—The Music Society does not notify the exhibitor that certain musical compositions are copyrighted. Rather they send paid spies into the theatre and it matters not whether you play their music or not they report that tax music has been played. In due time the exhibitor is bluffed into either paying the tax or else he faces trial in the Federal Courts for infringement.

In our case they brought suit on a piece of music that no member of our orchestra ever played at any time. Yet, to intimidate us they told our attorney they could send us to the penitentiary for playing their music without a license. We did not play it, but must defend ourselves in Federal Court anyhow. There is a law against extortionists, and it should be invoked against this Music Society.

Point Three.—The Music Society is composed greatly of publishers, who control most of the distribution of so called popular music, and we propose that the Federal Trade Commission shall investigate whether or not they are operating in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws.

Point Four.—The Music Society hires an able general copyright attorney and attorneys in each state to enforce its claims. We exhibitors all hire different attorneys, most of whom never had a copyright case in their hands, and don't know what it's all about. Here is where the Music Trust is smart and we are not.

We request that every exhibitor refuse to pay the tax and send his case to us, and we will engage one set of attorneys who will look after all our cases at very small cost to each individual exhibitor.

Gas Explosion Wrecks the Doric, Kansas City

A HUGE gas explosion early Thursday morning virtually wrecked the Doric theatre, one of Kansas City's five first run houses, resulting in $100,000 damages to the theatre and adjoining buildings. The janitor had gone to the basement to light a gas heater, the explosion occurring as he struck a match. The interior of the theatre was wrecked, while ornamental windows in the front were blown out. The hanging ornamental ceiling was torn loose and crashed to the floor. Samuel Harding, one of the owners of the theatre, said the loss was covered by insurance.

Point Five.—In many States the Music Society is operating illegally, for the reason that they are not registered with the Secretary of State.

Exhibitors in all States are asked to investigate this matter and if possible oust them or at least make it as uncomfortable as possible in retaliation of their unjust acts to us.

Point Six.—The Music Society sets an arbitrary price on playing copyrighted music. If you only play one piece of music a year their charges are the same as a continuous use of their music.

Point Seven.—In general practice the musician must furnish the music and rightly, as he alone knows what he can play. We do not stipulate tax music, but quite the opposite, knowing that we can easily and better operate without the tax music. Suppose then our musicians play tax music against our wishes (as is being done) and we are hauled into Federal Court as a consequence. Rightly the Music Society should take redress from our musicians, but they cleverly do not.

Point Eight.—The Music Society mails to our theatres sample copies of music free of charge. Now it seems rather reasonable that the right to play this music is included, otherwise why would they send it to us in the first place. Furthermore, we popularize their music and make the sale to the general public possible, all of which is a moral obligation if nothing else. They should pay us for playing their music, instead of we paying them.

Point Nine.—The musical compositions on which the Music Society demand a tax have no real standing in Court, because most of their musical compositions have never been adjudicated.

In explanation—under our system of patents and copyrights laws anyone reasonably can secure a copyright or patent on most anything, and a copyright is the most easy of all. The fact that you have a patent or copyright does not protect you. The Patent Office cannot know the merits or demerits of your claim. The Government is not at fault, because copyrights and patents are given out so freely. The work in our patent office is so great that no one man or set of men can know whether the numerous claims presented are all valid. Their practice is to be as careful as possible and then if the claims are not valid, and someone infringes on rights of a patentee, the case must be adjudicated by the Courts, in order to establish whether there are any rights or not. Only where a copyright has been infringed on and suit brought and won, is a copyright really valid. Therefore the tax music without adjudication is not really a valid copyright, and tax is being collected on only pretense and not on a basic principle.

Point Nine-A.—All music on which there is no copyright is in what is called "In the Public Domain." All tax free music belongs to the world "In the Public Domain," and the amount of music in the world is tremendous, as we all know. There has been so much music written, composed, extemporized, etc., in past centuries, that it is practically impossible to invent any new music, therefore the Music Society is not entitled to a copyright because their music is not new, it is all old stuff worked over. To prove this we engaged a committee of musicians to investigate various compositions of Tax Music and found that it is made up of excerpts, chords, phrases, parts of melodies, songs, etc., etc., of music, that has been and is in the Public Domain, some for a hundred years. The Music Society have and are collecting a tax on compositions that are part of the Public Domain (the property of the world). We are inclined to believe that with proper litigation the Music Society could be made to return the money they have collected from us.

Point Nine-B.—A group of exhibitors in Pennsylvania, who are associated with us in this fight had the following experience: A Member was sued by the Music Society for playing a certain composition, in turn the Music Society member has been sued by an Opera Company, because this composition has a melody that is very similar to the one used in the Opera. Just imagine such a mess. Yet we allow them to panhandle us into paying a license on music on which the Music Society has no property rights. At this rate, unless we do something to combat the Music Society, in time they will claim all of the Music in the Public Domain, and the whole world will be obliged to pay them tribute.

Point Ten.—How to defeat the Music Tax.

The first necessary act is for the exhibitor to refuse to pay the tax. Every exhibitor that pays the tax gives the Music Society added strength to defeat us who refuse to pay.

Refuse to pay therefore is the first requirement. You may do this by saying "you do not care to continue their franchise."

We are engaging attorneys of national experience in copyright law to assist us and such other attorneys as are necessary in each State, to defend your and our cases. We plan to carry one or more cases up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and secure a more equitable and just interpretation of the copyright act, if this is necessary.

The success of our efforts is dependent somewhat on National, State and individual organized efforts of exhibitors.

We engaged attorneys who can win, so let's all get back of them and make them win. Every exhibitor in America is invited to come along.

Famous Players German Experiment Fails

practically all been mentioned by Mr. Kaufman. At their own expense, Famous Players have taught all American producers that our pictures can best be produced at home, and in proving this fact they have manfully admitted their own failure.

The influx of foreign photoplays cannot, for a long time to come, be large enough to threaten the film industry in America as a business. After all, most films that are produced abroad, as at home, are business propositions. And so long as the business of film making for our trade can be most successfully carried on in America, I believe it would be a good thing for our exhibitors and our states rights people to forget the bugaboo of foreign competition. That goes also for actors, directors and all the human elements that help to make a film. But—they would do themselves a favor in welcoming the exceptional foreign film, and trying, now and then, to present an attempt at art in the photoplay. Such attempts are being continually made in Germany; and what is interesting to observe is that a film that is ostensibly made for its artistic value has an equal chance of commercial success in Europe with the mere pot-boiler. To close our eyes to new ideas would be fatal to the motion picture in America. The foreign e perimenters in film ideas can bring new life into the American field. "The Golem" has already done so, not to mention "Caligari" again, which has influenced a dozen directors in minor ways. Perhaps the form of the influence is a mere widening of the American horizon as to film possibilities. To exclude such stimulae is either the result of prejudice or stupidity, and in the long run the one is as futile as the other. Since the Famous Players experiment, I believe we shall look upon foreign films with a clearer eye and appraise them more open mindedly.

Dallas Exhibitor Reports Theft of Film

The Columbia theatre management of Dallas, Texas, reports the theft of a two-reel comedy entitled "Throbs and Thrills," and offers a liberal reward for information leading to the recovery of the film, as well as a reward for the arrest and conviction of the party stealing same.

Decision Makes Exhibitor Pay Under Contract

A DECISION important to the entire motion picture industry was handed down in the Superior Court in Boston last week, when the Vitagraph Company of America was awarded $6,759.90 against the Park Theatre.

The suit was based upon the plea that the Vitagraph company sold the Park a number of pictures and after several were played a cancellation was received. In turn, Vitagraph notified the theatre that the contract must be complied with and that the film would be in the Boston exchange awaiting use by the theatre. It also warned that the pictures must be played as contracted for or suit would be filed. The Park refused to show the pictures, so action was taken with the above result.

Film Building Planned for Albany

Albany, N. Y., is to have a film building of five or six stories in height, and ready for occupancy by May 1, 1923. It will be located on Broadway and will cost at least $250,000. It will be of sufficient size to accommodate two or three exchanges to a floor. There will be plenty of projection rooms and other conveniences. The building is to be erected by outside capital and is expected to fill a long-felt want in the Capital City.

At the present time, there are about twelve exchanges located in Albany, which cater to approximately 350 theatres in the territory covered. While these exchanges are now fairly well segregated, there are some at considerable distance.

Great Profit Realized on Theatre Site

In St. Louis real estate circles it is reported that the Columbia Theatre Company virtually realized a profit of $822,500 by exercising an option obtained in 1897 to purchase the theatre's site at Sixth and St. Charles streets for $362,500. Well posted realtors say the land is worth not less than $1,185,000.

The lot has a frontage of 79 feet on Sixth and a depth of 123 feet. The annual rental was $14,500 and on a 4 per cent basis, the usual rate on 99-year leases in that section the purchase price would be $362,500.

The company a few weeks ago bought the adjoining lot of 25 feet occupied by the Strand theatre which they also operate.

N. Y. Village Vote Favors Sunday Pictures

ANOTHER village in New York state will enjoy Sunday motion picture shows by a vote of its taxpayers. Following a strenuous campaign, in which the whole village participated, Ballston Spa, on last Saturday, voted for Sunday movies by 848 to 750. All persons over 18 years of age were allowed to vote.

Some little time ago, the village board of trustees passed an ordinance allowing Sunday movies. The ministers of the village made so strong a protest that the board rescinded its action and submitted the matter to a popular vote.

Washington Exchange Men Are Reorganized

The exchange men of Washington have reorganized. At the meeting of the local managers, last week, a local film board of trade and managers' conference was perfected, using the by-laws operative prior to the Hoy system era. R. C. Robin of Pathe was chosen president; J. A. Bachman, Educational, secretary; Sam Galanty, Hodkinson, and Manager Brown, Universal, taking the other offices as treasurer and vice president respectively. A convention of Maryland and Virginia exhibitors is expected to be held here in January, at which exchange arbiters and exhibitor representatives from Maryland, Virginia and the District will be selected and disputes settled amicably, according to Mr. Robin.

Missouri Still Hopes for Freedom of Screen

The motion picture industry hasn't given up hopes of obtaining a constitution provision assuring freedom of the screen in Missouri, in short the same protection extended to freedom of speech and the newspapers.

The Constitution Convention meeting a Committee of the Whole now has before it the report of the Committee on Preamble, Boundaries, Bill of Rights, and Distribution of Powers which declined to amend section 14 of the bill of rights to include the screen. The committee has recommended that the present constitution's provisions for freedom of press and speech be written into the new code.

But Paul S. Conwell, of Kansas City, and L. M. Henson, of Popular Bluff, have brought in a minority report, that would include a provision that "every person shall be free to say, and by any mode of impression and republish his ideas, opinions and sentiments on all subjects whatsoever."

No. Carolina Exhibitors Meet Dec. 27th

The regular mid-winter meeting of the North Carolina M. P. T. O. will be held in Greensboro, at the O. Henry Hotel, on December 27 and 28, according to official announcement from the offices of Henry B. Varner, secretary of the organization.

Varner in his official call for the meeting freely predicts another strong effort on the part of reformers to put over a state-wide censorship bill at the January session of the North Carolina General Assembly, and stresses as one of the important matters to be taken up at the Greensboro meeting the arrangement for strong representation in Raleigh during the entire time the legislature is in session and the raising of ample funds to defeat the measure.

Rumor Has Pola Negri and Chaplin Wedded

New York newspapers are said to have received reports from the coast to the effect that Pola Negri and Charley Chaplin are already wedded, though the same rumor knew nothing of when the ceremony had taken place.

Previous word from the coast was to the effect that the couple would be married next month. Miss Negri and Chaplin are said to have discussed their plans last week, but were not ready to issue any statement.

State Theatre Opens in Schenectady

Newest House of Mark Strand Circuit Represents Half Million Investment

WITH Wesley Barry sharing the limelight with Lieutenant Governor-elect George R. Lunn, and with an assemblage which included prominent residents of Schenectady, Troy and Albany, the new State theatre, in Schenectady, N. Y., was officially opened and dedicated last Saturday night, under most auspicious conditions. The house, which is the newest of the Mark Strand circuit, represents an investment of something over a half million dollars, and is most modern in every respect. It has been over a year in course of construction. With the completion of the Strand theatre in Troy, and its opening, probably in March, the company will then have houses in all three of the cities in the so-called Capital District.

Owing to illness, Max Spiegel, vice president and secretary, of the Mark Strand Theatre Circuit, was unable to be present at Saturday's opening. Moe Mark, president and general manager of the circuit, was also absent, as he is now on his way home from the Pacific Coast. Walter Hayes, of Buffalo, vice president of the circuit, was present, however, accompanied by Mrs. Hayes, and his daughter, Jean. Others present included Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Strand; Edgar L. Weil, of the Syracuse-Strand; Paul C. Reilly, of the firm of Reilly and Hall, architects of the house; John Woodward, Louis Moss, Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Warner, Eugene L. Falk and Harry Goetz, all of New York. At the conclusion of the opening Saturday night, there was a dinner served in Albany, at which the majority of those named above were guests.

The State is one of the most magnificent motion picture theatres in the country. It has a seating capacity of approximately 2,200 persons. The seating arrangement being of the stadium-like effect, with a double row of loges separating the orchestra chairs from those of the upper portion of the house.

The house will be managed by Edwin O. Weinberg, who at one time managed a small theatre in Troy, N. Y., and who later was associated with the management of the Elmwood, before going with the Strand interests. It is understood, however, that Mr. Weinberg will be transferred to Troy, N. Y., to manage the Strand theatre there, when it opens some time in March.

New Theatres Are Assured for St. Louis

Two more handsome theatre structures for the St. Louis district are assured, although one may bs delayed for a few years.

During the past week a syndicate including Walter A. Hays and Joseph H. Grand, attorneys; Charles S. Bowman, head of the Bowman Printing Company, and Harry L. Cohen, Chicago capitalist, purchased a parcel of ground on Delmar boulevard, west of Limit avenue.

They have since announced they they will improve the site with a 1,200-seat theatre and five-story store and apartment building to cost $400,000. Plans are now being drawn.

Harry Redmond, who operates the Majestic theatre in East St. Louis, has been approached by several prominent bnsiness men in that city who have suggested that he join in building a combination theatre and hotel or office building structure on the site of the Majestic.

This theatre has been a winner but is somewhat out of date and not the kind of structure that should grace such a valuable site. If the plans go through the new theatre would seat 2,200 persons and the building would cost upwards of $750,000.

Special Sunday Program to Be Tested in Missouri

Additional developments in the M. P. T. O. M.'s educational plan, which seeks to make the theatre a community center on Sunday, were announced this week. Three representatives of the state Sunday school association and three exhibitors will form a committee which will select all educational films to be used in the Sunday program. Various ministers of communities will be called upon to lecture for periods of one month from the stage or platform of the motion picture theatre, all lectures to be non-sectarian.

Within a week or so a conference between M. P. T. O. M. officials and the Sunday school association will be held to determine the details of launching the plan. A test of one month then will be made at the Star theatre, Warrensburg, Mo., owned by T. C. Goodnight, an executive official of the state exhibitors' organization.

Coincident with the State Sunday School Association's approval of the special Sunday program, the national Presbyterian laymen's conference, held last week at the Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, launched an attach on Sunday shows, the Rev. H. L. Bowlby characterizing commercial amusement and sporting enterprises as desecrators of the Sabbath.

Salesman for Paramount Dies on Coast

Cobert Amador, a salesman connected with the Los Angeles Paramount exchange, died last week in San Francisco where he had gone to attend the Paramount divisional convention which followed the general convention at Los Angeles.

"Knighthood" to Close at Criterion December 30

Owing to the fact that a longer tenancy of the Criterion theatre cannot be secured, the Cosmopolitan Corporation will bring the run of its picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, to an end at that theatre on December 30.

When Cosmopolitan's picturization of Charles Major's immortal story plays its final performance at the Criterion it will have completed fifteen and a half consecutive weeks at that theatre for a total of 245 performances in 108 days.

Scheduled at the beginning for two performances a day, the demand for seats was so great that it was found necessary to give three performances every Saturday, Sunday and holiday. Even this proved insufficient and for a time four performances a day were given, an extra matinee being held at 11 A. M.

Max Graf Ready to Resume Production on Coast

Max Graf, the producer, has taken up headquarters at the Metro studios on the Coast and is preparing for the production of his next three pictures. They will be made at the San Mateo studios in San Mateo, California.

Following this is to come "Beans," an original story by Mr. Graf and Mr. Van Loan.

The third production will be "The Gamble in Souls," a story on which Mr. Graf and Mr. Van Loan collaborated.

"Oliver Twist" for Xmas Week in England

What is said to be another record for quick playing dates in England is the showing of Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist" during Pantomime Week (Christmas Week).

This First National attraction was released in the States this fall, but owing to the policy of quick play dates adopted by Ralph J. Pugh, British managing director of Associated First National Pictures, Ltd., the British public will not have to wait a year or eighteen months before seeing the clever Jackie in Dickens' famous character.

Exhibitors Launch Distributing Corp.

Independent Theatre Owners Formally Organize Project at Chicago Meeting

SOMEWHAT of a sensation was sprung in the industry Tuesday when it was announced that the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation, a company owned and controlled by independent exhibitors, was formally launched at a meeting held in the Hotel Sherman, Chicago.

Many independent exhibitors in no way connected with exhibitor organizations, in the main, took the initiative in this proposition and invited the officers and members of exhibitor organizations, notably the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to meet with them in formulating a new line of action.

While the move tending toward this end was known in inside exhibitors circles for several days, no inkling of the real situation reached the industry generally until Tuesday's meeting was held.

The Hotel Sherman meeting was attended by about 100 leading independent theatre owners from different parts of the United States. The meeting was opened by W. D. Burford, of Aurora, Ill., who welcomed the exhibitors to Chicago. William A. True, of Hartford, Conn., presided by request.

Mr. True stated that letters and telegrams were on the desk from many independent exhibitors who were most enthusiastically in favor of the new movement, but were prevented from being present because of the great distance to be travelled, or for different business reasons.

The Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation is chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware. It has an authorized capital of $5,000,000. It will be entirely co-operative in character.

A demand for a company of this kind on the part of the independent theatre owner has been repeatedly made for several years, because of the tendency within the industry to effect lines of centralized control. The independent exhibitor saw his position in the business imperiled, and the desire for an exhibitor controlled distributing corporations was expressed at the Minneapolis convention of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in June, 1921, and reiterated with emphasis at the Washington convention in May of this year. At the latter meeting it was referred to the board of directors.

Many state and other meetings of exhibitors, allied with this national organization, went on record as favoring such a move. Similar action was taken by different regional bodies. Finally the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America decided that that organization could not of itself make such a move, but that the formation of an exhibitor owned and controlled distributing corporation was imperative to insure the safety of the independent theatre owners. Thus came the formation of the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation at last Tuesday's meeting.

Meetings will be held in different cities throughout the country soon to afford all independent exhibitors an opportunity to become affiliated with the new company.

Definite arrangements will be made for the establishment of exchanges or the acquiring of exchanges now in operation, in all parts of the country and also for the general extension of the business.

Vitagraph Abolishes Deposit System

Important Step Announced by President Smith Welcomed by Exhibitors

VITAGRAPH will abolish the deposit system entirely, beginning with the new year. This important step was announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the organization, and comes after careful consideration. Its effect is of the greatest importance to every exhibitor, and should be the means of relieving a situation that has become to many exhibitors almost unbearable.

In making the announcement Mr. Smith added that the action of the Vitagraph company was not retroactive and that no deposits already received under existing contracts would be refunded, but that every dollar of deposits so received would be applied strictly according to the terms of the contracts as they read at the time the contracts were made. Contracts made after the new year will require no deposit, but the Vitagraph company, Mr. Smith said, would expect and demand the same fair treatment on the part of the exhibitor as the exhibitor received from Vitagraph.

In explaining this important change in the method of dealing with the exhibitor, Mr. Smith said that ten years or more ago, when in the majority of cases the exhibitor represented only a small theatre with a few hundred seats and under a short lease, it was deemed necessary to require a substantial advance payment from the exhibitor, not that the money might be in the hands of the producer or distributor for use, but in order to insure the performance of the contract by the exhibitor. Today, Mr. Smith said, the conditions are different, and the situation is entirely changed. The exhibitor of today, with but few exceptions, Mr. Smith said, has a very substantial investment in the theatre which he operates. He is responsible and means to live up to the contract which he signs.

Fully ninety-seven per cent of the exhibitors today are thoroughly responsible, Mr. Smith said, not only in their financial ability to meet the obligations in their contracts, but in their desire and intention to meet them.

Beginning the new year, Vitagraph will accept contracts from any exhibitor with the complete understanding that full payment for each picture to be played will be made seven days before the play date designated in the contract. When the exhibitor, for any reason, desires to postpone the original play date named in the contract it will be necessary for him to pay the amount due on the contract in full at least seven days in advance of the original play date named in the contract, before Vitagraph will consent to the change, and then the exhibitor in each case will have the privilege of playing such pictures at a later date. No contracts will be accepted unless a definite play date is given for each picture at the time the contract is signed.

Von Stroheim to Make Norris' "McTeague"

"MCTEAGUE," Frank Norris' famous realistic novel, ranked among the greatest of American stories, will be Eric Von Stroheim's first production for Goldwyn, according to an announcement just received from that company. Speculation has been rife in motion picture circles ever since the news that Goldwyn had placed Mr. von Stroheim under contract as to what his first picture would be.

"McTeague" was one of Frank Norris' early novels; it is very realistic in its account of a San Francisco dentist's life. In fact, it was written while Norris was still under the spell of the great French realist, Emile Zola, and possesses many of his characteristics. Norris afterwards, in "The Octopus" and "The Pit," returned partly to his earlier romantic style, although the sternest realism abounds in many episodes in both of those novels.

Laemmle Flays First-Run System

Universal Chief Asserts Most First Runs Are the Purest of Bunk

DENUNCIATION of the present method of first run showings and a warning that the first run system is the greatest menace to the business, are contained in a statement just made public by Carl Laemmle, head of the Universal organization. The statement is a verbatim copy of a letter written recently to an exhibitor who solicited Mr. Laemmle's personal views on the first run situation.

"You are making the mistake of your life if you are booking your pictures according to what the first run house in your territory is showing!

"You know as well as I do that nearly every first run house in the United States and Canada is controlled either by some producing company or by some distributing concern, and you know mighty well that the purpose of controlling first run houses is to exploit pictures there so you will book them.

"In the great majority of cases nowadays the quality of a picture has precious little to do with the case. If a company produces a picture and the same company owns or controls theatres, it is going to run that picture in those theatres for the sake of the impression it will make upon you!

"There was a time when first run houses were really owned by individuals; then the first run meant something. In those days, if the man who owned the theatre and made his living out of it picked out a picture to exhibit, it was a safe bet for you to follow his lead and book the same picture.

"Evidently 'them days is gone forever.'

"Today, in most cases, first run does not mean first run, but it simply means first exploitation.

"I know what I'm talking about, because the Universal in its time has tried out the scheme of controlling a handful of theatres in order to exploit pictures. The only place we ever tried the stunt was in cities where Universal pictures were frozen out of first runs because competitors controlled all the good houses in the zone. The only place where Universal will ever own or control a theatre is in such cities as that! Heaven knows, we want to stick to the producing and distributing end of the business and never compete with our own customers, but in a few cities we have been driven into the theatre end of the business in self-defense.

"Therefore I am speaking as an exhibitor as well as a producer when I tell you that in all except a mighty few instances first runs are bunk. They are the greatest menace to the business and they are a double menace to you, because they not only compete with you but they mislead you into booking pictures that you should not book.

"There is only one safe booking system, and that is all summed up in the Universal slogan, 'Look before you book.' I have been telling you this for years. It is even truer today than when I first told you.

"If Universal has no first run in your territory, you know why. It is not because of the quality of the pictures. It is because the people in control of the first run houses are not running their theatres for profit but for exploitation of their own pictures in the hope that you will book them. That's where the profit comes in.

"Remember—Nowadays most first runs are pure bunk!"

Colored Convention Causes Trouble

F. P.-Lasky St. Louis House Rented at Request of Mayor Threatens Boycott

A DARK cloud has arisen on the horizon of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in St. Louis. And it is threatening to develop into a tornado that will damage the interests of the parent corporation and the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, which owns the Missouri and the Kings theatre, and is controlled by the New York company.

The latter house, which has been closed for months, is the cause. The National Baptist Convention (colored) is the modus operandi of the aforesaid storm. The trouble started a day or so prior to December 6 when the negroes gathered at the Kings theatre in solemn convention, despite the protests of white residents of the vicinity.

The local committee endeavored to rent the Coliseum. A circus had beat them to it. They next tried the Odeon, but it had been rented. They were up against it for a meeting place when Mayor Kiel and other city officials prevailed upon Nathan Frank, president of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, to rent the Kings. The negroes didn't like the arrangements. It was far away from the negro districts and they couldn't buy meals, etc., in the vicinity. But they took the theatre as a last resort.

And then things began to happen. The Kings is located in the Cabanne district, an exclusive white section of St. Louis. When it was noised about the district that a negro convention was going to use the Kings, beginning December 6 and that some 2,000 or more colored people would be present, Cabanne sat up, took notice and let out a yell that has since been heard in all parts of St. Louis and echoed in New York in the form of a telegram of protest to the Famous Players-Lasky officials.

The wire read in effect that the Cabanne District Improvement Association, representing 800 families, protested vigorously against the renting of the Kings for the convention, that it would damage the district and that if the management did not heed the protest the residents of the section would be asked to urge their friends throughout the city not to patronize the Kings in the future.

Later the Kings Highway Improvement Association and the Fountain Park Improvement Association joined in the protest and some have urged that the Missouri, the big Paramount first-run house on Grand boulevard, and all houses showing Paramount pictures be included in the boycott.

On December 5 and again on December 6 the negroes met at the Kings as planned. In the meantime Frank was out of town and arrangements could not be made for a cancellation of the contract renting the theatre to the blacks.
